ADDRESS.

The Proprietor and Publisher (Isaac Slater) in presenting this, the NINTH EDITION of the DIRECTORY OF SCOTLAND, to his very numerous Subscribers, desires to again express his thanks for the generous support which has been accorded to this Work for over Sixty Years.

It is interesting to note, as evidencing the vast progress made by Scotland during the above period, that, whereas the Directory published by this firm in 1821 contained only 246 pages, the names at present demanding insertion have increased the size of the Work to the considerable total of 2,330 pages.

To the many persons who have aided his representatives in obtaining information for the Volume, the Proprietor tenders his warmest thanks.

A CONCISE EPITOME

OF THE

HISTORY OF SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is extremely irregular in its figure, and is separated on the S.E. by the Solway Frith and the Cheviot Hills from England. It is so broken up by promontories projecting far into the sea, and by friths, or arms of the sea, deeply indenting the land, that there are few points which are more than forty miles from salt water—a great portion of the interior lying within thirty miles of the sea. A line drawn on the mainland of Scotland, from the most southerly point of the Mull of Galloway, in lat. 54 deg. 38 min. N. to Dunnet Head, its most northerly point, in lat. 54 deg. 40 min. 30 sec. is about 280 miles in length. Its breadth is extremly various, in consequence of the deep indentations produced by the friths. Taking the extreme breadth, however, of the solid part of the mainland—viz., from Buchan Ness point, on the Aberdeenshire coast, to Cowannmore point, on the west coast of Ross-shire, the distance is about 146 miles. In the southern portion of Scotland, from St. Abb's Head, in Berwickshire, to the point of Knapp, in Argyleshire, the distance is about 139 miles; on the other hand, the breadth of the island between some of the friths is very small. Thus, between Alloa, on the Frith of Forth, on the east coast, and Dumbarton, on the Frith of Clyde, on the west coast, the distance is only 32 miles; while from Loch Broom, on the west coast, to the Frith of Dornoch, on the east coast, the breadth is only 24 miles. The superficial contents are computed to be 30,463 square miles, or 19,496,132 statute acres, of which only 4,450,579 were under crop, in the bare fallow, or in grass—that is to say, that only 22·8 per cent. of the acreage of Scotland was under cultivation.

EARLY HISTORY.—The most early mention made of this portion of Britain by any historian is by Tacitus, who flourished about one hundred years after Christ. The original population seems to have consisted of Cimbrians, from the Cimbric Chersonese, the modern Jutland. About two centuries before the Christian era, the Cimbrians appear to have been driven to the south of Scotland by the Caledonians or Picts, a Gothic colony from Norway. Tacitus denominates the country Caledonia; the Venerable Bede who wrote about the year 700, names the country the Province of the Picts; and Alfred the Great, who translated his history into the Anglo Saxon tongue, about the year 882, called the people Piohts, and their country Piohtland. From the Picts, then, or Piohts, probably originates the population of the Lowlands, the Lowlanders having been, in all ages, a distinct people from those of the western Highlands. In the tenth and eleventh centuries, the name of Scotia, previously applied to Ireland, was given to modern Scotland, by which title it is designated by Adam of Bremen. About 258 years after Christ, the Dalraids of Bede, the Attacotti of the Roman writers, passed, or re-passed from Ireland into Argyleshire, and became the progenitors of the Scottish Highlanders, who speak the Irish or Celtic language, while the Lowlanders have always used the Scandinavian or Gothic. Fergus I., who is supposed to have reigned about 330 years before Christ, is said to be the founder of the Scottish monarchy. From him, till the year 1016, there are reckoned eighty-two kings; after which, till Britain became subject to one monarch, the succession was as follows:—Malcolm II; Duncan I; Macbeath (or Macbeth); Malcolm III; Donald VII; Duncan II; Edgar; Alexander I; David I; Malcolm IV; William; Alexander II; Alexander III; John Baliol; Robert Bruce; Edward Baliol; David II; Robert II; Robert III; James I; James II; James III; James IV; James V; Mary; James VI. In 1603, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, James VI. of Scotland ascended the English throne, and constantly resided in England; he and his successors calling themselves kings of England and Scotland, and each country having a separate parliament; till in the year 1707, during the reign of Queen Anne, both kingdoms were united under the general name of Great Britain.

SURFACE, CLIMATE, &C.—The most remarkable, and, perhaps, the most distinctive feature of Scotland is her mountains. The principle ones are the Grampian hills, which run from east to west—from near Aberdeen to Cowal in Argyleshire, almost the whole breadth of the kingdom. Another chain of mountains, called the Pentland hills, runs through Lothian, and joins those of Tweedale. A third, called Lammermuir, rises near the eastern coast, and runs westward through the Merse. Besides the continued chains, among which may be reckoned the Cheviot or Teviot hills, on the borders of England, Scotland contains many detached mountains, some of them of stupendous height. Ben Nevis, in Inverness, the highest mountain in Scotland, is 4,370 feet above the level of the sea; Cairngorm, in Banff, Ben Lawers, in Perth, Bracklach in Aberdeen, and some others, are not much inferior in altitude. The general surface of the country is singularly irregular, being, on the whole, hilly or mountainous, more especially the northern district, which comprehends nearly two-thirds of Scotland, and forms what is called the Highlands, extending from Dumbarton nearly to the extremity of the island, about 200 miles. Nothing can be more awful to a stranger than the appearance of the Highlands, where dusky mountains rise above each other, and lose their heads in the clouds; while the tremendous rocks fill the mind with dismay, heightened in no small degree by the noise of numberless torrents, which pour down their steep sides. The gloomy vales and glens below—narrow, deep, and dark—add sublimity to the scene. The Lowlands, or that part of Scotland not included within the district of the Highlands, may be said to comprise the portion which lies between the Friths of Tay and Clyde, and extends southward to the English frontier, and nearly the whole of Forfarshire. In this division the proportion of cultivated land is very considerable, exhibiting, in many parts, verdant plains, watered by copious streams, and covered with innumerable cattle; in others, pleasing vicissitudes of gentl rising hills and bending vales, waving with corn, well wooded, and interspersed with flowery meadows. Situated in the midst of the ocean, and in a high northern latitude, Scotland cannot boast of a regular climate. It is various, too, in different places; the cold, however, is not so intense as it is in similar latitudes on the continent. The thermometer does not sink so low during the winter as it does in the vicinity of London. Mountainous countries are always most subject to rain; and Great Britain being a sort of inclined plain, gradually declining from west to east, it has been thought that, on this account, the western coast is more wet. This excess of rain is, perhaps, rather owing to the prevalence of the west wind, which brings humidity with it in its course across the Atlantic; hence we find that more rain generally falls at Greenock than at Glasgow, and more at Glasgow than at Edinburgh. As a counterbalance to this, vegetation on the eastern coast is checked during the spring months by cold and piercing east winds. Notwithstanding all this, the air is in general pure and healthy.

The wild animals are the fox, the badger, the otter, the red deer, the wild roe, the hare and the rabbit; besides the wild cat, the hedgehog, weasel, squirrel, mole, &c. There is also proof of others having existed in the country, which are now exterminated, namely, the buffalo, or wild ox, the wolf and the beaver. Of the feathered tribe pheasants are to be found in the woods, though scarce; also that rare and beautiful bird called capercailzie, or cock of the wood. The ptarmigan, black game and grouse inhabit the heathy mountains; in the valleys are partridges; in the fens, the snipe and plover, and in the plains, most of the English singing birds, except the nightingale.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The country abounds with rivers and lakes, which are in general very pure and transparent, and are well stocked with fish. Most of the rivers have a short course from the mountains to the sea, and are consequently very rapid. The principal are the Tweed, Forth, Clyde, Tay and Spey, of which the Tay is the largest; they all abound with fine salmon and trout. The lakes of Scotland are grand and beautiful, and some of them of considerable extent; their banks are in general clothed with wood, and the scenery is highly picturesque and pleasing. Of these Loch Lomond is the chief, both in extent and beauty, diversified with a number of small romantic woody islands, and begirt with shores in some places decorated with wood, in others naked and majestic. Next to it may be ranked Loch Ness, whose waters never freeze; Loch Tay, Loch Awe, Loch Katrine, Loch Earn, Loch Leven and many others are deserving of the traveller's attention. It is worthy of remark that the name of loch or lake is given, on the western coast, to many inlets or arms of the sea. Throughout the whole extent of coast there are fine fisheries, which employ a vast number of hands, and furnish a hardy and skilful race of seamen for the British navy; while her bleak mountains were esteemed, in more remote times, as an excellent nursery for brave and hardy soldiers. RAILWAYS, &c.—This northern portion of the United Kingdom has successfully emulated the more southern, its facilities of intercommunication with various distant districts—River, Road, Canal and Railroad—bring their respective aids to effect the accomplishment of this great object; and this last-named has of late years taken a most prominent and valuable part in this department of the "Country's good," by opening up a rapid means of intercourse with almost every part of the country. It would be superfluous to give here a list of the railways in operation and progress, every place visited by a line being specially noticed throughout the work.

COMMERCE, MANUFACTURES, MINERALS, &c.—Scotland produces many valuable articles of commerce; besides the trade in corn, the rearing of black cattle and sheep for the English market is very considerable. Great attention is paid to the breed of black cattle; while the horses and sheep, originally small, now rival those of England. Its woods of oak and fir are considered with proper attention, and made serviceable to the navy. The mines of coal, lead and iron have long been sources of wealth, as have freestone, limestone, and slate, which are found in various places, and in great abundance. The manufacture of paraffin and other oils has been introduced into several parts, and bids fair to become one of the staple products of the country. Some attention is also paid to its marbles, which prove little, if at all, inferior in colour or polish to those of Italy. Scotland cannot, at present, exhibit many of the precious metals, though considerable quantities both of gold and silver, have at different periods been obtained from her bowels, and it is not improbable that the time may arrive when these treasures will again be laid open. Copper has been discovered in many places, though at present it is nowhere wrought to any considerable extent; but a very rich mine of antimony has been worked, richer, it is believed, than any at present known. Most of the gems and precious stones, with the exception of the diamond, have also been found in Scotland. Manufactures of various kinds are in a very thriving condition. In printed cottons, and figured goods, in shawls, &c., it equals those of England; shawls especially, for which Paisley has become highly celebrated; and the glass and stoneware are scarcely surpassed anywhere In linens, particularly those for the table, Dunfermline has long been famous. Manufactures of broad cloth, silks, and gauzes are also upon a respectable footing. The intercourse with England daily becomes more frequent (thanks to the rail), to the mutual advantage of both countries. This has the effect of rendering the manners, dress, and language of both alike, and extinguishing all national prejudice. The dress of the Lowlanders resembles that of the English; that peculiar to the Highlanders, though not so common as formerly, is still worn by many; it is composed of woollen stuff, called "tartan," of various colours, checkered. Many wear a sort of petticoat, reaching to the knees, and called a "kilt." The stockings, made of similar checkered stuff, are short, and tied below the knee by tartan garters, with tassels.

The Scots are uniformly sober and frugal: instead of lavishing their gains they are wisely lead by or economically expended to enable them to live in comfort, and make a respectable appearance. Intelligence is more common than in most countries, owing to the number of excellent parochial schools, and the cheapness with which education is acquired; and there are few branches of literature in which the Scotch have failed in attaining a degree of excellence, although they cannot boast of many authors at an early period. Before the abolition of episcopacy, the ancient church establishment was composed of two archbishoprics and twelve bishoprics. The National religion is now the Presbyterian, founded on an equality among its pastors. A very influential and numerous body, denominated the "The Free Church of Scotland," was constituted in 1843, and the members have been increasing in number from that time. The clergy of Scotland are well educated, and singularly exemplary in their morals. Roman Catholics, of whom the number is not very considerable, are tolerated, as well as Episcopalians, and various dissenters from the Established Church. There are four Universities: that of St. Andrew, founded in 1412; that of Glasgow, founded in 1433; that of Aberdeen, founded in 1500; and that of Edinburgh, founded by James VI. in 1582. Since the union of the two kingdoms, which event took place in 1706, the political government has been the same with that of England; the civil code, however, and the manner of administering justice are different. Of this, and of the principal events which have occurred in Scotland, more particular notice will be taken in the historical description of Edinburgh. Scotland, though neither so rich nor so populous as the southern division of the island, has long borne a name for martial exploits; and of late she has risen to as great eminence in literature and the arts.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATIVE SYSTEM, POPULATION, &c.—The mainland of North Britain is naturally divided into three portions. The extremity is parted from the centre by the Moray Frith, Loch Ness, Loch Lochy, and Loch Linnhe, connected with each other by the Caledonian Canal. The midland portion is again parted from the southern by the Friths of Forth and Clyde, the River Forth, Ben Lomond, and its cognominal lake. These are again unequally sub-divided into thirty-three counties, which, in the following table, comprising the sheriffdoms, stewartries, and the bailiewicks, and the chief towns, are arranged according to their situations.

EDINBURGH AND LEITH,

WITH THEIR ENVIRONS,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CRAMOND AND CRANTON, RESTALRIG, STOCKBRIDGE, NEWHAVEN, GORGIE, DAVIDSON'S MAINS, MURRAYFIELD, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

EDINBURGH, the beautiful metropolis of Scotland, occupies a site in the northern part of the county of Edinburgh, or Mid Lothian, remarkable for its romantic inequalities, its rich historical reminiscences, and the beauty of its architectural features, within two miles from the south shore of the Frith of Forth; in lat. 55 deg. 57 min. 23 sec. N., and longitude 3 deg. 10 min. 30 sec. W.; distant from London 392 miles (by rail 427), 91 from Carlisle (110 by rail), 55 from Berwick-upon-Tweed (57¼ by rail), nearly 44 from Glasgow (47¾ by rail), 43 from Dundee (by rail 66), 109 from Aberdeen, 241 from Inverness, by Aberdeen, and 191 from Inverness by Perth.

ORIGIN, NAME, AND BRIEF NOTICE OF EVENTS CONNECTED WITH THE CITY.

The origin of Edinburgh, as of many other towns of high antiquity, is shrouded in great obscurity; there can be little doubt, however, that the town grew up around the lofty castle rock, a fortress almost impregnable before the introduction of gunpowder, and which rises abruptly with precipitous sides on the north, west, and south, sloping eastward into a ridge, steep both on its northern and southern sides. It was on this ridge that the town first began to be built. The most ancient name on record applied to the rock fortress is Casteth Mynyd Agnes, "the fortress of the hill of Saint Agnes." The name Edinburgh is said to be derived from Edwin, an Anglo-Saxon King of Northumbria, who died in 634. The Lothians, and whole S.E. of Scotland, were at that time part of the kingdom of Northumbria; the northern parts of the country were then the scene of continual wars.

An old Gaelic name of Edinburgh is Dunedin. For some centuries the town was confined entirely to the ridge already noticed. On the north was a lake, now drained, the North Loch. On other sides it was defended by a wall, of which some traces still remain. After the cession of Lothian to the Scots, in 1020, the castle often became the residence of the Scottish monarchs, and in the 12th century David I. made it his favourite habitation. Dwellings now multiplied around it, and David founded the Abbey of Holyrood, whose canons he empowered to erect a suburb westward of their abbey; and this suburb soon united itself with Edinburgh, which had rapidly extended itself down the declivity of the castle eastward. The monks gave the name of Canonsburgh, or Canongate, to their new town, which appellation it still bears. The long street thus formed between the abbey and the castle consisted, it is presumed, of very humble dwellings, as it appears that long after this period they were thatched with straw. From William the Lion, about the close of the 12th century, it is supposed the town received the privileges of a royal burgh, and the honour of being a place of mintage; but soon after, this monarch, as the price of his liberty, surrendered it to Henry II., King of England, by whom it was retained till 1186. In the year 1214 a parliament first assembled here, in the reign of Alexander II. In 1239 a general council of the Scottish church met here; and during the reign of Alexander III. it became the royal residence, and the depository of the records and regalia of the kingdom. In 1291 the town and castle were surrendered to King Edward I., but were speedily regained by the Scots, who held them, until the fatal battle of Dunbar, in 1294, enabled Edward to recapture them. The castle continued in possession of the English until 1312, when it once more reverted to Scotland. In 326, the fourteenth parliament of Bruce met in Holyrood Abbey; and the next year was memorable for the admission of the borough representatives among those of the other estates, and for the confirmation of the treaty of Northampton, by which the independence of Scotland was acknowledged by Edward III. Shortly after, Robert I. granted a charter to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, and placed under their dominion the town of Leith, "with its harbour and mills." During the reign of Edward III. the castle twice changed hands, but it ultimately submitted to its natural masters, and the city continued to increase in importance, until it became the residence of the chief functionaries of the government, after the murder of James I. in 1436-7, after which it became the recognised metropolis of the kingdom. Edinburgh now rapidly increased in population; and as it was hemmed in by walls, houses of great height were erected, and very close together.

The character of the Old Town at the present day is derived from this time. At this time, also, a new street was formed, the Cowgate, parallel to the main street on the south, at the bottom of the ridge, now one of the poorest and most narrow streets in the Old Town. About the middle of the 15th century Edinburgh was encircled by walls, at the instigation of James II., the marriage of which monarch with Mary Gueldres, and her coronation, were celebrated with great pomp in the Abbey of Holyrood, which abbey became the tomb of the king eleven years afterwards. The turbulent reign of James III. succeeded, during which the sites of the markets were determined, the provost made sheriff of the town, and various municipal privileges granted to the inhabitants; in token of the bravery and loyalty of the inhabitants, a banner was also given to them, to be displayed "in defence of their king, their country, and their own rights." This flag, from its colour, received the name of the "blue blanket," and remains now in the custody of the convener of the trades, at whose appearance therewith, says tradition, not only the artificers of Edinburgh, but those of the whole kingdom, are to repair to it, and fight under the convener. On all great pageants this memorial of the loyalty of Edinburgh is ostentatiously displayed. In 1508 the thickly-wooded lands of the "Borough Moor" were cleared of their trees, in virtue of powers granted by the king; and, in order to obtain purchasers for the timber, the magistrates enacted that "whoever bought as much as would be sufficient to make a new front to his house, might extend the same seven feet further into the street;" by which impolitic permission the town was filled with wooden houses, and the main street contracted fourteen feet in width.

The year 1513 was memorable for the double calamity of the plague and the disastrous defeat at Flodden. The latter misfortune filled Edinburgh with consternation; all capable of bearing arms were ordered to defend the walls, and "the women were discharged from crying or clamouring in the streets;" the Privy Council for safety adjourned to Stirling, where James V. was crowned. At this alarming crisis the fortifications were strengthened, and a new wall built, which encompassed the high grounds on the south, parts of which still remain. The plague continuing its virulence, the young king was removed to Dalkeith or Craigmiller. During his minority, the Earl of Arran and Cardinal Beatoun, jealous of the influence acquired by the Earl of Angus, through his marriage with the queen dowager, attacked him and his partisans in the street, near the Netherbow port, in which conflict more than two hundred and fifty men were slain, and the residue of the Hamilton's or Arran's party expelled by the Douglasses, or faction of Angus. This bloody affair was designated by the populace "Cleanse the Causeway." Similar sanguinary occurrences were not unfrequent in these contentious times, and during his whole minority the capital was the theatre of tumult, chiefly through the turbulence of the house of Douglas. In consequence of the prevailing disquietude, the Privy Council and Parliament frequently met in the Tolbooth, or common gaol. In 1514 the small force was appointed, afterwards known by the name of the "City Guard," which was dissolved so lately as 1817. In 1528, excitements and disturbances arose in the city, from the secret diffusion of the principles of the Reformation.

The year 1532 is signalised by the establishment in the capital of the College of Justice, which important corporation, including the whole body of functionaries connected with the supreme courts, endowed Edinburgh still more with the attributes of a metropolis; and as the city rose in dignity, the Parliament interfered for the correction of its deformities. Rows of obstructing tenements were removed, and many salutary regulations enforced for the prevention of impurities; the High street was paved, and lanterns were ordered to be hung out at night by the inhabitants. In 1534, Norman Gourlay and David Straiton were tried and condemned at Holyrood for heresy, and executed at Greenside. In 1543, the magistrates having thought proper to deprive the craftsmen of the privilege of voting at the election of provosts and bailies, the deacons drew their swords in the council chamber; but the strife was subdued, partly by compromise and partly by the irresistible reasonings of an armed force. The next year was a disastrous one for the rising metropolis. Henry VIII. of England, in revenge for the opposition made by the Catholic regency of Arran and Beatoun to the marriage of his son Edward with the young Queen Mary, sent an army and fleet to ravage Scotland under the command of the Earl of Hertford, who, landing at Leith, set fire to Edinburgh, and burnt the abbey and palace of Holyrood. The attempt to capture the castle was unsuccessful; but the departing foe destroyed the pier of Leith, seized the ships in the harbour, and "neither pyle, village, town, nor house, in their way homewards, was left unburnt." In consequence of this outrage, a French garrison was introduced four years afterwards, under D'Esse, who fortified Leith, and took every precaution against a repetition of the calamity.

About the year 1556, the intrepid reformer, John Knox, became conspicuous. The Reformation now made rapid progress in Scotland, not without strife and bloodshed. The population destroyed not only the symbols of popery, but also many of the religious houses. On the anniversary of Saint Giles, the patron saint of Edinburgh the priests and monks were furiously attacked and dispersed, and the effigy of the saint, which they were carrying in procession, was indignantly destroyed; and when the lords of the congregation arrived from Perth, Stirling, and Linlithgow, they found their purposed work had been anticipated by the people; but it is fortunate that the rage of the reformers in Edinburgh was confined to the decorations and furniture of the churches, so that two of the chief ecclesiastical edifices still remain, while the convents and monasteries were converted into dwelling houses, some of which are still standing. The struggle between the two parties now became fierce, and but for the arrival of an English force to the assistance of the Protestants, the issue of the contest would have been doubtful; but the reformers, with these auxiliaries, becoming ascendant, the triumph of the popular sentiment was complete. The first assembly of the reformed kirk met in Edinburgh on the 15th of January, 1560. On the 9th of August, 1561, Mary, Queen of Scots, landed at Leith, from France, to sway the sceptre of her ancestors, and she was well received; but her predilection for the Romish ritual soon abated her popularity, and subjected her to insult: even her private chapel was invaded and her devotions interrupted. The drama now became fearfully interesting, the scenes were rapidly shifted, and tragical incidents occurred in quick succession. Darnley was proclaimed king at the market cross on the 28th of July, 1565, and on the next morning, within the chapel of Holyrood, he became the husband of Queen Mary. On the 9th of the following March, David Rizzio, the Italian favourite of the queen, was murdered, in the palace, by Darnley and his confederates. On the 19th of June the queen gave birth to a son, afterwards James the Sixth of Scotland and the First of England. On the 10th of the ensuing February, 1567, while Darnley sojourned in a secluded house, called the Kirk-o'-Field, near the site of the present university, it was blown up by gunpowder, and he lost his life. Many circumstances coincided to involve the Earl of Bothwell in suspicion of planning the murder, and the queen of a guilty privity. Be this as it may, Bothwell, having divorced himself from his wife, became the husband of the queen in three short months after its perpetration. This shameless marriage took place on the 15th of May, 1567, in the palace of Holyrood, and was the occasion of fresh disturbances in Edinburgh. So formidable was the insurrection, that the queen and Bothwell, on the 6th of June, fled from the popular odium, first to Borthwick Castle, and thence to Dunbar, which abandonment of the capital was followed by the entry of three thousand insurgents, who took possession of the seat of government. Shortly afterwards the queen was brought back to Edinburgh, a spectacle for the insults of the populace, and the next day was sent a prisoner to Lochleven Castle. A regency was then formed in the name of the infant son of Mary, James VI., and the Earl of Moray was proclaimed regent; but the assassination of this popular favourite, two years after, at Linlithgow, threw the capital into confusion. The struggle between the contending parties was renewed with alternate ascendancy; the Earl of Lennox, became the new regent, and Kirkcaldy of Grange, the provost of the town and governor of the castle, declared for the queen, whose party held a parliament in the Tolbooth, while that of the regent held theirs in the Canongate. Kirkcaldy seized all the arms he could find, and planted a battery on the steeple of St. Giles, and being supplied by France with money and ammunition, he and his associates became formidable antagonists to the regency. The Earl of Morton and the regent, on the other side, having united, fortified Leith, and for two years the two parties waged a fluctuating warfare, until Queen Elizabeth of England, at the entreaty of Morton, sent a small army from Berwick, which soon reduced the castle; and the captive Kirkcaldy, with his brother, were shortly afterwards hanged at the cross, although they had surrendered under a promise of merciful treatment.

But the time had now arrived for the young king to assume the government himself. He entered the city with great pomp, and immediately convened a parliament in the Tolbooth, and tranquility was in some degree restored. The Earl of Morton, the late Regent, was now accused of being an accessory to the murder of Darnley, was convicted, and executed by a machine called the "maiden," similar to the guillotine, alleged to have been an invention of his own. The Reformation being now firmly established, education became an object of solicitude; the University of Edinburgh arose, and around it many subordinate colleges and schools, by which the character of the city was elevated. The poor, also, were not forgotten; funds for their maintenance were granted from the revenues of the suppressed religious houses and their lands. King James, though he had assumed the throne, held the sceptre with a feeble hand. The chief nobility, clergy, and a considerable portion of the community, were jealous of monarchy, and the uncompromising character of the new religion, with the austere manners of its professors, were little in unison with the manners and practices of the Court. They preferred presenting James with 5,000 merks, about £280 sterling, to provide an entertainment, and shortly after they were required to send a beautiful ship to Denmark, at the cost of £500, to bring home the king and his bride; they also presented the bride a valuable jewel, pledged to them by the king as security for a considerable sum advanced him. Still these munificent donations did not exempt the citizens from "intolerable impositions and grievous exactions." The execution of Queen Mary, in 1586, excited great indignation in Edinburgh, but neither the king nor his subjects displayed their feeling by any deeds. In 1591, the Earl of Bothwell made a daring attempt to seize the person of the king. Having introduced himself at night into the court of the palace, he advanced to the royal apartment; but before he could force the doors the alarm was given, the citizens flew to arms, and frustrated the attempt. Bothwell escaped, but eight of his followers were executed. A fresh cause of tumult soon arose: the young Earl of Moray, the heir of the regent, was assassinated by the Earl of Huntly; and as the king was suspected of connivance, the citizens indignantly arose, and openly insulted both the king and his ministers. James, thought it prudent to retreat to Glasgow, where he remained till the hurricane had subsided. Not long afterwards the monarch was presented by these same citizens with ten tuns of wine, and a hundred of their number were in attendance at the baptism of Prince Henry; a guard of fifty citizens was also appointed to protect his person from Bothwell. In 1598 a rebellion broke out among the boys in the High School, and one of the bailies was shot by a youth while attempting to subdue it. James, annoyed by the freedom of the language that was uttered from the pulpits, attempted to restrain it, which excited an insurrection that not only occasioned his prerogative to be insulted but his person to be endangered. He, in consequence, retired from the city, ordered all the public courts to be removed, and was only prevented from avenging himself on the city still further by the supplications and cash of the magistrates. In 1596 James was again in collision with his subjects, in consequence of some English players being introduced into the city. Shakspeare is supposed to have been one of the number. The clergy fulminated their abhorence, and the presbytery issued a decree against the players, which the privy council annulled, and the continuance of the players was tolerated, which was followed up, in June 1598, by an ordinance that every Monday should be a play day. At this period an important alteration was made in the computation of time. The year had hitherto commenced on the 25th of March, but by a convention of estates, which met on the 10th December, 1599, it was ordered that in future New Year's Day should be on the first of January.

The manners of the times are thus described by an Englishman who visited Edinburgh in the year 1598:—"Myself," says he, "was at a knight's house, who had many servants to attend to him, that brought in his meat with their heads covered with blue caps, the table being covered with great platters of porridge, each having a little piece of sodden meat, and when the table was served the servants sat down with us; but the upper mess, instead of porridge, had a pullet with some prunes in the broth; and I observed no art of cookery or furniture of household stuff, but rather rude neglect of both, though myself and companions, sent from the governor of Berwick about bordering affairs, were entertained after the best manner. They drink pure wines, not mixed with sugar like the English; yet at feasts they put comfits in their wines, after the French fashion, but they have not our vintners' fraud to mix their wines. I did never see nor hear that they have any public inns with signs hanging out, but the better sort of citizens brew ale, their usual drink, which will distemper a stranger's body. Their bedsteads were then like cupboards in the wall, with doors to be opened and shut at pleasure; so that we climbed up to our beds," &c. In 1600, the Duke of Rohan, having visited Edinburgh, states that the city was about one thousand paces in length, and from four to five hundred in breadth; and adds that there was nothing remarkable in it but the great street, which was very long and broad, and extended from one end of the town to the other; the houses, he says, were not sumptuous, being almost all built of wood.

On the 24th of March, 1603, Queen Elizabeth died, and James succeeded to the throne of England, to which country he immediately departed, after taking formal farewell of the citizens of Edinburgh, at the church of St. Giles, where he addressed them after the sermon, and both parties, it is said, evinced deep emotion. The superior splendour of the English throne caused James, perhaps, to think his Scottish one too plain and unostentatious; and, to change its character a little, he sent down to the magistrates of Edinburgh patterns for their gowns, which they were directed to wear, and, moreover, to have a sword of state carried before them; but instead of sending with these patterns 59,000 merks, which he owed, he obliged them to be content with 20,000, in full of all demands; notwithstanding which, when the king paid his long promised visit to his Scottish capital, in 1618, he was received with pomp and addressed with adulation; the magistrates, upon the "verie knees of their harts," doing him reverence, and styling him the "perfection of eloquence and the quintessence of rulers." They entertained him with a banquet, and presented him with a silver basin with 10,000 merks (about £560 sterling) in it, in double gold angels. A parliament was immediately convened, and among other acts which it passed was one for the restitution of archbishops, bishops and chapters. About this time the town council purchased the mills of Bonnington from Robert and John Logan, with the lands and tiends belonging to them, for 1,230 merks Scots (£68 6s. 8d. sterling). In 1621 an act was passed for the coping of houses with lead, slate or tiles, instead of thatch, and water was introduced the same year by pipes; three new bells, were imported from Holland—two for St. Giles's church and one for the Netherbow Port. March 27, 1625, closed James's career; and on the 31st, Charles I. was proclaimed king in his stead; and in June, 1638, he was crowned King of Scotland in the Abbey of Holyrood.

The erection of Edinburgh into a bishopric, and an order for the introduction of a liturgy into the churches, caused great tumults in the city, resulting in a general assembly at Glasgow, in 1638, by which Presbyterianism was immediately restored. The treaties of Berwick and Ripon exhibit both the hatred of the Scotch to prelacy and the folly of the monarch in endeavouring to enforce it. Soon after the treaty of Ripon, Charles visited Edinburgh, but though he was ostentatiously received, his conduct during his residence was neither discreet nor grateful. The "great rebellion," as it is termed, broke out shortly after, during which the "solemn league and covenant" between the two nations, for the extirpation of prelacy, was signed in the High Church, Edinburgh, in July, 1643, and twelve hundred men were sent in consequence to assist the English parliamentary forces against Charles; but in 1645, the covenanters being routed by Montrose, at Kilsyth, Edinburgh was threatened with destruction by the Marquis unless the prisoners of the king's party were instantly released, and the city at this moment being desolated by the plague, his demands were complied with. On the 18th of May, 1650, the Marquis of Montrose was brought a prisoner into Edinburgh, and three days after was hanged at the cross.

Averse to Republicanism, the Scots proclaimed the exiled Charles the Second as their king, which brought upon them the avenging sword of Cromwell; and in December, 1650, he was in possession of Edinburgh and its castle, but the magistrates had fled to Stirling, the head-quarters of Charles, leaving the city to be governed by thirty chosen citizens. The battle of Worcester having placed Scotland completely in the power of Cromwell, commissioners were sent by him from England to rule the kingdom, who arrived at Dalkeith in January, 1652; and from them the humble citizens were obliged to obtain consent ere they could elect new magistrates. Under the sway of Cromwell, Edinburgh and Leith enjoyed repose; but so greatly were they impoverished by so many years of strife, that very few of the inhabitants were in a condition to pay their debts, and the magistrates were served with a charge of horning for £550,000 Scots, £48,833 6s. 8d. sterling, which, with difficulty, they obtained time to pay.

During the period of the Commonwealth there was a virtual union between England and Scotland, and much salutary reform was introduced in the municipal regulations. The restoration of Charles in 1660 was hailed with joy by the town council, who, in return for a donation of £1,000 made to his Majesty, received permission to levy a tax upon the citizens of one-third of a penny on each pint of ale, and twopence on each pint of wine consumed in the city; indeed, at this epoch, both loyalty and disaffection were made pretexts for amercing the citizens, in the one case by a tax, and in the other a fine. Adam Woodcock, at this period, was licensed by the town council to run a coach between Edinburgh and Leith, the fare to be fourpence each person; and the baron bailie of Broughton had a grant made to him of the goods and chattels of all women condemned for witchcraft.

In August, 1660, the English tribunals gave place to the ancient forms of government, and the first parliament, in 1661 rescinded all acts passed during the last twenty-three years, and restored episcopacy. Severities towards the Presbyterians followed, and Scotland, in consequence, during the succeeding twenty-seven years, was in a state of insurrection and anarchy; the lawn of the prelate was stained with the blood of the Presbyterian, and the slaughtered bodies of the covenanters were strewed thickly on the land, until at last the mastle of Knox proved more invincible than the mail of the cavalier. The covenanters of the west and south rose in arms. Dispirited by the desertion of more than one-half of their numbers which never much exceeded five thousand, and fatigued by their long march, they reached the Pentland hills on the 28th November, 1666, where they were overtaken by General Dalziel, with a body of cavalry. Though now reduced to eight hundred, they bravely repulsed several attacks of their assailants, but were at length overpowered and dispersed. About fifty were killed, one hundred and fifty taken prisoners—twenty of these were executed at Edinburgh, thirty-five were hanged in the country before their own doors, and others were grievously tortured. The magistracy, by bribes and entertainments, entailed a debt upon the city which to this hour is a vexatious burden to its inhabitants. The Duke of Lauderdale appears to have been a prime recipient of the corporation money. Some curious specimens of the trifling of the municipal functionaries occur at this period. Women were forbidden to wore plaids on their heads on pain of seizure. The charges made at "penny weddings" were solemnly moderated, and one James Michael Philo, physician, was authorised to erect a stage in Edinburgh, on which to practice his profession, but discharged from any performance of rope dancing until his claim had been examined by the "master of the revells." In 1678, it appears from a "list of the hail possessors (of houses) in the different parishes," taken under authority of the magistrates, that there were at this time within the royalty, 3,833 families, so that, taking five as the average number of each, the population amounted to 16,665.

In the year 1679, James, Duke of York, took up his abode in Holyrood House, and won the affections of the citizens by the gaiety of his court, and by his conformity to their predilections; balls and masquerades were got up by the ladies in his suite, and the novel beverage tea was introduced to their parties. To the popularity acquired by James in this visit, may be, in some degree, ascribed that zeal for the Stuart cause which was manifested in 1715 and 1745. In January, 1685, an equestrian statue of Charles II. was ordered to be erected in Parliament close now Parliament square; and on the 15th February following the flagitious original was as cold and lifeless as the statue. A few days afterwards a stage was erected at the Cross, from which the Lyon King at Arms, attended by all the great functionaries, proclaimed King James, and swore unto him allegiance and fealty; the pulpits became rostrums for adulation; and Viscount Melfort, one of the secretaries of state, was presented by the obsequious town council with a jewel worth £500 sterling, for the many services he had rendered the city, and three days afterwards with £800 in cash, for delivering the city address to the king. A few months after the accession of James, the citizens beheld the unfortunate Earl of Argyll led ignominiously to the same gallows on which Montrose had suffered, he having attempted to raise the standard of rebellion in Scotland in concert with the Duke of Monmouth, and in support of his attempt in England. The earl having been indebted to Heriot's Hospital to the amount of £58,403 10s Scots, the corporation of Edinburgh was compelled to pay the money. The suspension of the test soon disclosed the intentions of the King. Early in 1686, every printer and bookseller in Edinburgh was forbidden by the privy council to print or sell any book animadverting on the Romish faith; but when the officer of the privy council waited upon James Glen with this prohibition, Glen said he had "one book in his shop which was all against popery, but which he would sell in spite of the mandate." "What book is it?" inquired the officer. "It is the BIBLE," answered Glen, "the worst enemy the Church of Rome ever fought against." Tumults now became very frequent. The chancellor's lady and other persons of distinction were insulted as they were returning from the celebration of mass. This led to an order from the privy council that one of the rioters, a journeyman baker, should be whipped through the Canongate; the populace rushed to the rescue of their martyr, beat the executioner, and continued tumultuous during the night; the king's foot guards and soldiers from the castle fired upon them, and a woman and two men were killed; next day several of the captive rioters were ordered to be whipped. The council, however, took care to have musketeers and pikemen in attendance to prevent the repetition of a rescue. A drummer was shot for having said he could find in his heart to run his sword through some papists; and a fencing master was hanged at the Cross merely for having drank "confusion to papists," and having likewise expressed his good will towards the rioters.

Such were the measures of the city magistracy, in defiance of the murmurs and disgust of the citizens; and shortly afterwards we find these servile minions assuring the king that they were "ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by his sacred person upon all occasions, and praying the continuance of his princely goodness and care towards the city." This fawning was rewarded by the surrender to them of the impost upon ale, of which the corporation had for some time been robbed by the treasury. So zealous, indeed, were the magistrates in the Papal cause, that one Watson, a popish printer, having been distrained upon for rent, the articles seized were forcibly taken from the officer, and these, with their owner, conveyed to the sanctuary of Holyrood. Watson was afterwards made king's printer, which appointment was continued to his son in the reign of Queen Anne. From the records of Fountainhall, we find that, on the 23rd November, 1686, the king's yacht arrived at Leith, with the altar, vestments, images, priests, and their appurtenances, for the popish chapel in the abbey of Holyrood. On St. Andrew's day the chapel was consecrated by holy water, and a sermon by Wederington. On the 8th of February, 1688, Ogstoun, a bookseller, was threatened for selling Archbishop Usher's sermon against the Papists and the history of the French persecutions, and all the copies were taken from him. On the 22nd March the rules of the popish college in the abbey of Holyrood were published, inviting children to be educated gratis. But the landing of the Prince of Orange in England changed the scene. The Presbyterians now poured into Edinburgh, and the Papists rushed out. All was uproar; the Earl of Perth, the chancellor, fled from the city, and the government fell into the hands of the revolutionists. The populace assembled at beat of drum in multitudes; the abbey was attacked, the assailants were fired upon, and a dozen were killed and thrice as many wounded. This caused their retreat, but they quickly reappeared, headed by the magistrates, town-guard, train band, and heralds; another skirmish ensued, in which the revolutionists were successful; the abbey church and chapel were ransacked, the college of the Jesuits destroyed, and the houses of the Roman Catholics plundered; in short, every symbol of the hated religion existing in the city was extirpated with a fierceness approaching to frenzy—even the wynds and closes were explored, and many religious houses therein were entered and sacked; he only class that remained true to the popish cause were the clergy, and they were the chief sufferers by the change. The privy council and magistrates veered with the shifting wind; these men, who so lately were ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by King James, with a baseness unmatched, were the first in "offering their services to the Prince of Orange," and the loudest in their complaints of the "hellish attempts of Romish incendiaries."

On the 14th of March, 1689 assembled the convention of estates—the most momentous meeting that Edinburgh ever witnessed. It resolved, that James having forfeited the crown, it should be offered to William and Mary; a second result of their deliberations was the memorable "claim of rights;" a new election of municipal officers was advised, by poll of the burgesses paying, watching, and warding, and liable for other public claims; several ministers were deprived of their pulpits for refusing to pray for the new Sovereigns; the convention became a parliament, and the established religion was declared Presbyterian. The predicament of Edinburgh at this moment was singularly critical: on the one hand was the convention, surrounded by the masses of its supporters, armed and unarmed, including six thousand Cameronians from the West; on the other was the castle in the hands of the Duke of Gordon, the partizan of James, and who could, if he willed it, make the city a ruin; numerous violent royalists also paraded the streets, with Lord Balcarres and the reckless Dundee at their head—the latter, indeed, with a party of fifty horse, waiting his signal for mischief. Yet no explosion took place; Dundee quitted the city for Perthshire, first clamouring up the western side of the castle to commune with the governor. The death of this daring foe on the 17th of July, 1689, and the surrender of the castle on the 13th of June, 1690, secured the permanency of the salutary changes.

During the reign of King William, Edinburgh reposed in comparative peace; but the new civic government became jealous of the college of justice, whose members it disarmed: the gaol was filled with the dissaffected, among whom were the Lords Balcarres and Kilsyth, and the atrocious Earl of Perth. Many of the acts of the new authorities were arbitrary and severe. Towards the close of William's reign, six ships sailed from the Firth of Forth, amid the acclamations of multitudes, to plant a colony on the Isthmus of Darien; and when the failure of this scheme became known in March, 1699, the rage of the people was ungovernable, as the miscarriage of the enterprise was attributed to the influence of the king; the prisons were broken open, and many acts of violence perpetrated before the popular effervescence subsided. On Saturday, the 3rd of February, 1700, a dreadful conflagration broke out on the south side of Parliament square, which destroyed an extensive pile of buildings, including the Advocates' Library and the Bank of Scotland, and dislodging nearly two hundred families from their dwellings.

The reign of Queen Anne was signalised by the event so momentous to Scotland, the "Act of Union." Alarming were the disturbances which manifested the unpopularity of the measure, and the period between January 11th, 1705, and January 16th, 1707, during which it was discussed, was one of clamour and outrage. The parliament and commissioners were compelled to seek the protection of the military during the ratification of the articles. Many of the prognostications of the adversaries of the union were realised; the capital was soon deserted by the higher classes of its residents, and their expenditure, in consequence, transferred to the rival metropolis. Among other causes of regret was the discontinuance of the popular city pageant called the "riding of parliament," a grand and gorgeous procession, which took place at the opening of the session of parliament. From the 1st of May, 1707, when the Act of Union came into operation, the aspect of the Scottish capital became strikingly changed, improvement ceased, and for nearly half a century little activity or energy was displayed. In 1715, two attemps were made by the Jacobite party to get possession of the city, both of which failed. The remarkable tumult, known as the Porteous mob, happened in 1736. Its particulars, including the attempted rescue of Wilson, the smuggler; the firing on the mob by Porteous, the commander of the civic militia; his trial, conviction, reprieve, and subsequent execution by the hands of the rioters; the arrest of the lord provost for his want of precaution, and the fine of £2,000 imposed upon the city as a compensation to the widow of Porteous—are all fully detailed in Sir Walter Scott's "Heart of Midlothian"; and it is not the least extraordinary circumstance connected with this singular affair, that none of the actors in the tragedy were ever discovered, although a large reward was offered. The next agitating event was the surrender of the city to Prince Charles Edward in the rebellion of 1745, followed by the proclamation, at the Cross, of James VIII as king of Scotland. The battle of Prestonpans quickly succeeded, terminating in favour of the Pretender, after a conflict of only ten minutes' duration; it was at this battle that the good Colonel Gardiner fell. After an impolitic continuance in the city for six weeks, the Chevalier departed with 6,000 troops, which, after marching and wandering for six months, agitated alternately by hope and apprehension, met their final overthrow on the plains of Culloden, April 16th, 1746. Between this period and 1779, few events occurred important enough for our brief chronicle. In 1778, the mutiny of Lord Seaforth's Highland regiment, on account of their being ordered to India without payment of some arrears, and a stipulation as to the limits of their service, occasioned a considerable sensation. The mutineers ascended the lofty eminence of Arthur's Seat, where they remained encamped until an adjustment was effected by Lords Dunmore and Macdonald. The French revolution caused in Scotland, as well as in the sister kingdom, diversity of opinion and much excitement of feeling. Those who hailed the emancipation of a great people from vassalage formed associations for the nurture of the principles of freedom and the diffusion of political knowledge; these were watched with jealousy by the British government, and a system of espionage was established, the treacherous agents of which incited their victims to enthusiastic imprudence, and then betrayed them to their employers Among those so denounced were Messrs. Watt, Downie, Muir, Margarot, and Gerald; the first was convicted and hanged; the others were transported; Watt had formerly been a government spy. The trials of these gentlemen and the severity of their sentences shed no lustre upon Scottish jurisprudence; the judges were too plainly animated by political feeling.

During the long war which ensued on the French revolution, and when the country was in dread of invasion, volunteer companies were formed in Edinburgh. Nowhere, perhaps, was the enthusiasm which led to their formation more genuine or more widely diffused among all classes of the people. In the latter part of 1811, the lawless part of the population concocted a plan for the indiscriminate plunder of the citizens, and on the last night of the year a numerous gang of juvenile desperadoes sailed forth with bludgeons, and knocked down every one whose appearance gave them the chance of booty. Resistance was ineffectual, for the police were routed, and High street and North Bridge street were for hours in the possession of the plunderers. Many persons were dangerously wounded, and several mortally. Three of the delinquents were executed in High street, after conviction of murder. On the 15th August, 1822, George IV. disembarked at the landing place of Leith, the first visit of the sovereign to Scotland since the time of Charles II. Our limits will not permit a detail of the movements of royalty, nor of the pompous preparations which were made for the reception of the king. From all parts of Scotland multitudes thronged to Edinburgh. Loyalty was enthusiastic and very demonstrative. The feeling was national, and all classes shared in it. The king's entrance into Edinburgh was a triumphal procession. He took up his abode at Dalkeith House, as the guest of the Duke of Buccleuch; held a levee at Holyrood, and attended public worship on Sunday in the High Church. On the 26th the king was present at the ball of the Caledonian Hunt, and next evening he saw "Rob Roy" performed at the theatre. A splendid banquet was prepared for His Majesty in the great hall of the parliament house by the lord provost, magistrates, and town council. The lord provost received a baronetcy. On the 29th, after partaking of a repast at Hopetoun House, the king embarked on board the royal yacht at Port Edgar, near Queensferry, amid the cheering acclamations of assembled thousands; and thus closed a spectacle which will long live in recollection. We pass over a period of twenty years, and arrive at a similar occasion of excitement in the Scottish metropolis.

On Monday, the 29th of August, 1842, Her Majesty Queen Victoria, with her royal consort, Prince Albert and suite, embarked at Woolwich, to visit the Scottish capital; on Thursday morning the approach of the royal squadron was announced by the firing of two guns from the castle; at eight o'clock it arrived at Granton Pier, and in little more than an hour after the royal party landed on the platform erected for the occasion. Her Majesty was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and the arrangements on this occasion in Edinburgh were upon a scale unequalled in the annals of Scotland. On Tuesday morning, the 6th of September, Her Majesty took her departure for the north, and she and her royal consort were received with every expression of joy and loyalty wherever they went. On Monday, the 14th of September, the Queen again passed through Edinburgh on her way to Dalkeith, to embark at Granton. Since that time Her Majesty has frequently visited Edinburgh, sometimes spending a night at Holyrood, in going to, or returning from, Balmoral; but although public feeling has always been ready to display itself warmly, no particular preparations have been made upon any occasion, except in the month of August, 1876, when Her Majesty again visited Edinburgh, and upon that occasion unveiled the memorial to the late Prince Consort, a description of which will be found in a subsequent column.

INTERESTING RELICS OF ANTIQUITY.

Edinburgh Castle is situated on the western and rugged extremity of the central hill, on which the ancient part of the city is built. It is of great antiquity; the rock is supposed to have been first fortified about the year 617 by Edwin, son of Ælla, king of Northumbria. The area of the rock on which the castle stands measures about seven statute acres; its highest point is 437 feet above the level of the sea, and it is accessible only on the eastern side, the others being nearly perpendicular. Within are several batteries, magazines, storerooms, and arsenals for upwards of thirty thousand stand of arms, barracks, containing lodging for two thousand men with their officers, and every other requisite for the mustering and accommodation of a numerous garrison. In 1093, Malcolm III. (Malcolm Canmore) having fallen in battle at Alnwick, the castle of Edinburgh was besieged by Donald Bane, his brother, who aspired to the crown, to which the old Scottish customs gave him a right to pretend, although Malcolm had left children. The castle fell into the hands of the besiegers, the garrison escaping by a postern, under shelter of a thick fog, and carrying with them to Dunfermline the body of Margaret, Malcolm's queen, known as St. Margaret, the sister of Edgar Atheling, whom the Saxons of England sought to elevate to the throne after the battle of Hastings. William the Lion occasionally resided in the castle of Edinburgh, and in 1174 it was delivered up to the English, pledged for his ransom when taken prisoner at the battle of Alnwick, but shortly after restored on his marriage with the sister of Viscount Beaumont. In 1239, the daughter of Henry III. of England, marrying Alexander III. had this castle assigned for her residence. During the contest between Bruce and Baliol, in 1296, the castle was besieged and taken by the English. It was several times taken and retaken during the struggle which then began, and which was decided in favour of the independence of Scotland by the battle of Bannockburn.

In 1297 it was dismantled by Sir William Wallace having been repaired, it again fell into the hands of the English, when Robert Bruce caused it, with the other recovered fortresses, to be demolished. It was in ruins in 1336, when it served for a retreat to Count Namur's forces, defeated by the Earl of Moray. It remained in ruins till 1337, when Edward III. of England gave orders for its being rebuilt, and placed a strong garrison in it. In 1341 it was surprised by William Douglas. In 1371, David II. died in it. During the reign of Robert III. the burgesses of Edinburgh had the singular privilege conferred upon them of erecting dwellings within the castle, subject to no other limitation than that they should be persons of good fame. In 1400, the castle was taken by Henry IV. of England. It was seized by the Earl of Douglas in 1416, and held by him till 1418. The condition of Scotland at this time, when James I. was a prisoner in England, was one of nearly complete anarchy.

After the murder of James I., at Perth, 1436, his queen and the royal family took refuge in the castle. James II., in the year 1438, was detained here by Sir William Crichton, the chancellor, in a sort of honourable durance, till, by a stratagem of the queen mother, he was conveyed, with his own consent, out of the castle in a wardrobe chest. Here, too, William, sixth earl of Douglas, and his brother David, were, in 1440, basely murdered by Crichton, who envied the earl's riches and dreaded his power. James III. was also confined in this castle by his subjects for nine months, till he was released in the year 1482, by the Duke of Albany, who, assisted by the citizens of Edinburgh, surprised the castle. It was converted into a state prison for James V. and his brother, while infants. In 1573, this fortress was held for the unfortunate Queen Mary, at that time a prisoner in Fotheringay Castle, by the faithful and heroic Kirkcaldy of Grange, who resolutely defended it, for thirty-three days, against the united efforts of the Scots and English. When the fortifications were battered down, the blockhouse on the east taken by assault, every supply of water exhausted, and the garrison in mutiny, he made an honourable capitulation—not to the regent Morton, but to Sir William Drury, commander of the English forces; but Queen Elizabeth, regardless alike of her general's honour and her own, gave the prisoners up to the regent's disposal. In 1650, the castle sustained a siege of above two months against the parliamentary army, commanded by Cromwell, and at last yielded on honourable terms, Cromwell remarking that "if it had not come as it did, it would have cost very much blood."

After the flight of James II., at the close of 1688, it was long held for him by the Duke of Gordon, with a weak and ill-provided garrison. During this time, the Viscount Dundee, better known in Scottish history and tradition as Graham of Claverhouse, clambered up the precipice to hold a conference with Gordon, before he raised an army in the highlands on behalf of James.

In 1715, an unsuccessful attempt was made by the rebels to surprise this fortress; and in 1745, although the Highlanders were masters of the town, they did not venture to attack this post. During the war in the beginning of the present century, a number of French prisoners were confined in the castle, but there have been no further memorable events in its history. In a small room on the ground floor of the castle, Mary Queen of Scots gave birth on the 19th of June, 1556, to her only son, James VI. of Scotland, afterwards James I. of England, in whom were united the crowns of the two kingdoms. The oak panels have been renewed after their original form, and copies of original portraits of Queen Mary and her son placed in it.

In the castle is to be seen a curious piece of ancient ordnance, called "Mons Meg," made of longitudinal bars of hammered iron, girt with iron hoops. It is thirteen feet in length, and twenty inches in calibre. Stone balls were fired from it, and some of them lie beside it. It is supposed to have been made at Mons, in the fifteenth century. It burst in 1682, on being fired in honour of the Duke of York's visit to Scotland. It was carried to London in 1754, and brought back in 1829.

The view from the castle is very extensive and splendid. On the highest point of the rock is a small chapel in the Norman style of architecture, said to have been built in the first half of the twelfth century, in the reign of David I. On the esplanade of the castle is a monument, in the form of a Runic cross, erected to the memory of the officers and soldiers of the 78th Highlanders, who fell in India, in 1857-8, while aiding to quell the Indian mutiny.

For a long period it was the general belief of the people of Scotland that the regalia (placed in the castle in 1707) had been surreptitiously removed to London; but, by virtue of a royal mandate, a search was made in 1818, when a large oaken chest was found, in what is now called the "Crown room," firmly secured with locks; these having been forced, the regalia, consisting of the crown, sceptre, and sword of state, were discovered carefully wrapped in fine linen cloth. They are of elegant workmanship, and in perfect preservation. The crown is of pure gold, highly ornamented with precious stones; the sceptre is of silver, double gilt, with a stem two feet long, of a hexagonal form, divided by three buttons or knobs; it is surmounted with a chrystal globe, two inches and a quarter in diameter; its whole length is thirty-four inches. The sword of state is five feet long, and of exquisite workmanship; the pommel and hilt are silver gilt, and fifteen inches in length; the traverse is seventeen inches and a half. The scabbard is of crimson velvet, and richly ornamented. This sword was presented by Pope Julius II. to James IV. The lord treasurer's rod of office is of silver gilt, and of beautiful execution. These relics, together with a ruby ring set with diamonds, worn by Charles I. at his Scottish coronation; the golden collar of the Order of the Garter, sent by Elizabeth to James VI.; and the badge of the Order of the Thistle, set with diamonds, bequeathed by Cardinal York to George IV., are exhibited three hours every day. Tickets of admission are obtained gratuitously at the City chambers.

The Palace of Holyrood House stands at the eastern extremity of the city, and at the bottom of the Canongate. It is a beautiful building, of a quadrangular form, with an open court, which is 94 feet square. The more ancient parts of this fine edifice, consisting of the north-west towers, were rebuilt by James V. about the year 1528; though Holyrood seems to have been an occasional royal residence for ages before. During the minority of Queen Mary, the palace of Holyrood was burnt, as well as the city, by the English forces under the Earl of Hertford; soon after it was repaired and enlarged beyond its present size.

At that time it is said to have consisted of no fewer than five courts, the most westerly of which was the largest. Great part of the palace of Holyrood House was burnt by the soldiers of Cromwell; but at the Restoration it was again repaired and altered into its present form by King Charles II., from designs by Sir William Bruce. Prince Charles Stuart took up his residence for some time in this mansion of his forefathers in 1745; and hither the inhabitants of Edinburgh repaired to pay the contribution levied on the city. It was afterwards occupied by the Duke of Cumberland. In 1793 apartments were fitted up for the residence of the Counte d'Artois, the Duc d'Angouleme and Berri, and others of the French royal family. In 1831, the Comte de'Artois, Charles X. of France, returned to his old apartments, after an absence of thirty years, with several of his family, but soon quitted them, and went to Germany. Previously to the visit of George IV to Scotland, apartments in the palace were fitted up for his use; and, though he resided at Dalkeith, a levee, drawing-room, and meetings of privy council were held here. The palace is now fitted up as a residence for her present Majesty, who occasionally spends a short time here on her visits to Scotland. The apartments of Mary Queen of Scots are shown to visitors. In them are many articles said to have been used by Queen Mary, and pieces of work said to have been wrought by her, but their history is very doubtful. Dark stains on the floor of one of the rooms are said to have been made by the blood of Rizzio, and to mark the spot where he was murdered on 9th March, 1566. A suit of armour and the boots and gloves which Darnley is said to have worn at the slaughter of Rizzio, are placed in a small apartment in which the deed was done. Along the north side of Holyrood Palace extends the picture gallery, a long apartment with a rather low roof, on the walls of which are hung pictures, pretending to be portraits of the kings of Scotland, from Fergus I. downwards. They are worthless as works of art, and equally so as portraits, having been all painted in 1684-86 by James de Witt, a Dutch painter, who received £240 for the whole job. In the picture gallery the peers of Scotland meet to elect their representatives for the House of Lords, and Her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland holds his levees and receptions. Adjacent to the palace stands the ruins of the church which belonged to the abbey of Holyrood House. In 1128, David I. founded this abbey by a charter, the original of which is in the archives of the city; it was bestowed on the canons regular of St. Augustine, who had also granted to them the church of Edinburgh Castle, with those of St. Cuthbert, Corstophine, and Liberton, in the County of Mid-Lothian; and of Airth, in Stirlingshire; the priories of St. Mary's Isle, in Galloway; of Blantyre, in Clydesdale; of Rowadill, in Ross; and three others in the Western Islands. They had also portions of lands assigned to them in different parts, with a most extensive jurisdiction; and so many other grants and privileges were bestowed on this abbey, that it was deemed the richest foundation in Scotland. In 1177 a national council was held in this abbey, on the arrival of a papal legate, to take cognisance of a dispute between the English and Scottish clergy, as to the submission of the latter to the ecclesiastical, jurisdiction of the English prelate. The part now remaining was the nave of the original church, which, when entire, consisted of a centre and two aisles. It was burned by the English in 1385, and again in 1544 and 1547. In the south-east corner of the chapel is the royal vault, in which were deposited the remains of David II. James II., Prince Arthur, third son of James IV., James V. and his consort, Magdalen, with their second son, Arthur, Duke of Albany, and Henry, Lord Darnley. This repository of the royal dead did not escape the fury of the Revolution, when the populace plundered and burned it, their fury having been excited by its use for Roman Catholic worship in the time of James VII. Part of the leaden coffins was then carried away, and the remainder at the clearing out of the rubbish, after the roof fell from the weight of the heavy flags with which it was covered, in 1768. The great eastern window, erected about 1670, was blown down by a storm, in 1795, but restored about twenty years after, from its own fragments. The precincts of the abbey of Holyrood House, including the Queen's Park, were a sanctuary for insolvent debtors. A very handsome fountain was erected in 1859, opposite to the front of the royal palace. This fountain is a copy of an old and very beautiful one still standing in the courtyard of the ancient palace of Linlithgow.

THE MINT OF SCOTLAND.—In the lane called Gray's close stand the buildings formerly occupied by the Mint of Scotland. They were erected in 1574 but no money has been struck since the union of the two kingdoms. The first coin seems to have been struck in Scotland in the time of Alexander I., who commenced his reign in 1107. These coins were thin pieces of silver called pennies, and this was the silver coin in use until the reign of Queen Mary, who introduced reals or royals, afterwards called crowns. The oldest gold coins bear the name of Robert, but whether of Robert I. is not fully ascertained. James V., in his bonnet pieces, contracted the surface and increased the thickness of the coinage. The general names for gold coin in Scotland were florins or nobles, and lions. When copper was first coined in Scotland is uncertain; James III., however, in 1466, procured an act from his first parliament for coining copper money, four to the penny. Pennies, worth one-twelfth of an English penny, were coined by James VI., and twopenny pieces, or bawbees, after the Restoration. To the prince formerly belonged the exclusive right of coining money and all mines of gold and silver; but coinage was not confined to the capital, and many coins bear the name of Aberdeen, Perth, Stirling, Dundee, Linlithgow and Dumbarton. The principal instrument used in coining before the Restoration (when the mill and screw were introduced) were a hammer and steel dies. It is conjectured that the total sum of money in circulation at the Union amounted to upwards of £900,000 sterling.

THE PARLIAMENT HOUSE, where the Scottish Parliament met before the Union, occupies the south and west sides of Parliament square, formerly known as Parliament close, on the south side of High street, behind Saint Giles's Church, once the Cathedral of Edinburgh. The present front of the buildings is of recent date, in the Italian style; the front was originally in the renaissance style. The hall formerly used for meetings of parliament is one hundred and twenty-two feet in length and forty in breadth; the ceiling is of massive carved oak, and the floor is also of oak, arranged in panels. This apartment now forms a handsome promenade, where gentlemen of the legal profession meet daily during session to transact business and attend their cases pending before the court of session, to the meeting of which and of the High Court of Justiciary the Parliament House is now appropriated. At the south end is a large and beautiful window of stained glass, on which is depicted a female figure of Justice. There are in the hall several marble statues—one by Roubillac, of Lord President Forbes, in his judicial robes; one of Henry Dundas, the first Lord Melville; another of Lord President Blair; one of Lord Chief Baron Dundas, of Armiston—all three by Chantrey; one of Lord Cockburn, by Brodie; and others of Lord Jeffrey and Lord President Blair, by Steele Boyle. Within this hall was held the great banquet given by the corporation of the city to George IV., on his visit to Scotland in 1822. Connected with the hall are court-rooms, in which the first and second divisions of the court of session are held; there are also entrances from it leading to the Advocates' Library and the Library of the Writers to the Signet. This noble hall, with the justiciary, exchequer, and jury courts, the Union Bank of Scotland, and the office of the police commissioners, occupies the whole of Parliament square, except the north side, where Saint Giles's Church stands In the centre of the square is an equestrian statue of Charles II.; the figure, which is in Roman costume, was raised in 1685, at an outlay of, it is stated, £215.

JOHN KNOX'S HOUSE.—This venerable building, once the habitation of the reformer Knox, is a conspicuous object in passing from High street towards the Canongate, as it projects at the terminating corner of the former, narrowing the street several feet at the point called the Netherbow. On its angle there is a small bust, often said to represent Knox, but really intended to represent Moses, his right hand pointing to a stone above, on which is the name of God in Greek, Latin and English, the left hand resting on a tablet, supposed to represent the tables of the Law. In consequence of the dilapidated state of the building, and its inconvenient projection into the street, its removal was, some time since, contemplated; a subscription, however, was raised to avert an act which would have been greatly deplored by many. The building was repaired in 1850, and it has recently become, by legacy, the property of the Free Church of Scotland.

MORAY HOUSE, on the south side of the Canongate, erroneously said to have been the residence of the Regent Moray, is really a building of the early part of the seventeenth century, and was erected by a Dowager Countess of Home, whose daughter carried it to the family of Moray. It was the residence of Oliver Cromwell whilst he was in Edinburgh in 1648. At the time of the union it was occupied by the Earl of Seafield, the Chancellor of Scotland, and many meetings for deliberation on the question of the union were held in it. A popular legend represents the Treaty of Union as having been signed in a summer-house in the garden, of which a drawing is given in some editions of Sir Walter Scott's "Tales of a Grandfather." In the garden, at the back of the house, grows a venerable thorn of uncommon size, which tradition affirms was planted by Queen Mary; but this is very improbable. The house is now occupied as the normal school of the Free Church.

PALACE OF MARY OF GUISE.—The wreck of this structure, once tenanted by the Queen of James V., regent of Scotland in 1550, now forms Blair's close, on the north side of the Castle hill, consisting of a group of the most squalid and wretched tenements in the Old Town. The building on the right, at the bottom, was the oratory, and that on the left was the principal section of the palace; over the doorway a cypher, formed of the Queen's initials, is still to be traced, and the inscription "Laus et honor Deo." A house, surrounded by a grove, stands near the same spot, built by Allan Ramsay, the poet, and afterwards occupied by his son, portrait painter to George III.

GRASSMARKET, &c.—In the centre of the wide street called the Grassmarket, the paving stones are arranged in the form of a small St. Andrew's cross, to mark the spot on which stood the fatal "gallows-tree," until 1785; and from this spot the spirit of many a martyr to the cause of Presbytery has winged its way to glory, during the persecuting period when Charles II. and James II. attempted to enforce prelacy upon the people of Scotland. Here it was that Porteous, the captain of the City Guard, was hanged by the mob in 1736, an occurrence admirably narrated by Sir Walter Scott in the "Heart of Midlothian." To the west of Candlemaker row is the cemetery of Greyfriars' Church, where, amongst many other eminent persons, George Buchanan, Sir George Mackenzie, Alexander Henderson (the leader of the Scottish Presbyterians in 1638 and following years), Colin Maclaurin, Allan Ramsay, Adam, the architect, Robertson, the historian, and Blair, whose sermons were once so popular, and many other well known to fame, were interred. In this churchyard many Covenanters, chiefly from the west of Scotland, were kept prisoners for some time in 1679, with no lodging but the bare ground and no shelter from the weather. Some were set free, others were banished as slaves to the plantations.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CITY AND ITS INSTITUTIONS, MONUMENTS, &c.

The city of Edinburgh consists of two parts, called the Old Town and the New, singularly contrasted in their aspects; the Old Town covers the elevated ridge, sloping from the summit of the castle, on the west, to the base of a group of hills, at the eastern extremity, named Arthur's Seat, Salisbury Crags, and the Calton Hill. The aspect of the Old Town is singularly picturesque, from the great height of the buildings which crown the steep ridge. The New Town is built on the more level ground, which chiefly forms a gentle and extensive declivity towards the north, an almost continuous street uniting it with Leith on the north-east. These two divisions are separated by a deep hollow, part of which was formerly occupied by a bog or lake called the North Loch, now drained. Prince's street, upwards of three-quarters of a mile in length, a single row of houses, faces the Old Town and the castle, the intermediate space being chiefly occupied with public gardens, through the midst of which passes one of the principal lines of railway, connecting Edinburgh with the west and north of Scotland. The North Bridge and the Mound cross the hollow, and connect the Old Town with the New. To the spectator, viewing the city from an eminence, the situation appears stikingly adapted to afford security in times of discord, and to give display to architectural beauty in the happier days of peace. For several centuries prior to the year 1768, Edinburgh had made little efforts to enlarge its boundaries; but since that epoch in its history, its extension has been very rapid. Provost Drummond had the honour, on the 21st of October, 1768, of laying the first stone of the North Bridge, the completion of which formed a ready connection with the site which the New Town now occupies; the North Loch had been previously drained. In 1767 an act was passed for extending the royalty over the fields to the north; the New Town was immediately commenced, and the buildings proceeded with so much rapidity, that, in 1771, St. Andrew square, and the streets which open from it, were nearly finished; since which, streets, squares, places, terraces, crescents, circuses, and public edifices have arisen in rapid succession, wholly built of stone—an assemblage which, for regularity and beauty, will bear comparison with the most magnificent cities of Europe. The New Town of Edinburgh now consists of three parts. The first of these divisions, which stands upon the low ridge of the Old Town, is laid out in the form of a parallelogram. The principal longitudinal streets are three—Princes street, George street, and Queen street; and these are intersected by others at right angles.

George street, which is one hundred and fifteen feet broad, is distinguished by the grandeur of its appearance, the elegance of its architecture, and its exact uniformity. On the east it is terminated by a beautiful square, called St. Andrew square; on the west by another very fine square, named Charlotte square; and it is ornamented by two statues, executed by Chantrey—one of George IV., the other of Mr. Pitt—the latter greatly superior to the former in dignity of expression and attitude. In the centre of St. Andrew square stands the elegant column erected by subscription, chiefly of naval officers, to the memory of the first Lord Melville: this noble pillar, the design of which was copied chiefly from Trajan's column at Rome, was begun in April, 1821, and completed in August, 1822; the entire height of the pedestal and pillar is 136 feet 4 inches, and the statue on the top 14 feet additional. At the intersection of George street with Castle street is the beautiful bronze statue of Dr. Chalmers, by Steell.

Queen street, which forms the north side of the original parallelogram of the New Town, consists, like Princes street, of a single row of houses, which look northwards, and command from their upper windows a magnificent view of the Frith of Forth and opposite coast and hills of Fife. In front of Queen street are Queen Street gardens, northward of which is the second part of the New Town, beginning with Abercrombie place and Heriot row, which look toward the gardens. The central street of this part of the New Town, is called Gt. King street, and is terminated, like George street, by large open areas; one of these is named Drummond place, the other the Royal circus. A third section of the New Town occupies the site formerly the park of the Earl of Moray, between Charlotte square and the water of Leith, comprising Moray place, Ainslie place, Randolph crescent, and many superb streets. A noble bridge of four arches, called Dean bridge, crosses the water of Leith, on the north-west of this part of the New Town, the height of the bridge being 105 feet above the bed of the stream, which here flows through a deep dell or ravine. New streets and crescents have recently sprung up in the district to which this bridge gives access.

The third or eastern part of the New Town comprehends Leith walk, the road connecting Leith and Edinburgh, and the buildings on the slopes of the Calton Hill, including the magnificent terraces called Regent terrace, Carlton terrace, and Royal terrace. Above these terraces, on the slope of the hill, are extensive gardens, to which the occupants of the houses in the terraces have access; whilst the summit of the Calton Hill, crowned with monuments, and its northern slope are open to the public. In a line with Princes street is a grand approach to the city from the east by Regent's bridge, which passes over the unsightly district called the Low Calton. The act of parliament authorising the erection of this bridge and the formation of the road, the greatest and most useful of the architectural improvements of Edinburgh, was passed in 1814; the bridge was finished in March, 1819. The arch over the Low Calton is fifty feet wide, forty-five feet in height on the north side, and fifty-four on the south; the roadway is formed of reversed arches, which support the rocky materials of which it is composed; the bridge is ornamented at its centre by Corinthian pillars and open arches, surmounted by entablatures, in the line of the adjoining buildings, called Waterloo place. Immediately adjoining is the Post Office, erected on the site of the old Theatre Royal, at the end of Princes street—a large and beautiful building, in the Italian style, completed in May, 1866, at a cost of about £120,000.

The Old Town of Edinburgh extends chiefly to the northward of the central ridge occupied by the High street. The High street itself is prolonged up the acclivity westward, under the names of Lawn Market and Castle hill, to the gate of the castle; eastward it assumes the name of Canongate, and terminates at Holyrood Palace. Canongate was formerly a separate burgh, but it is now municipally, as well as for parliamentary representation, incorporated with Edinburgh. Many of the nobles of Scotland once had residences in the Canongate, but it is now chiefly inhabited by the poorer classes. Here also, in close proximity to the palace, public works are more numerous than in any other part of the city.

The Old Town as well as the New Town is entirely built of stone; but the grand and venerable appearance which it presents on a general view, or in its principal streets, is exchanged for an aspect of sad squalor and misery in many of its narrow closes or lanes, particularly those which descend in parallel lines from the High street and Canongate on both sides, where the population is extremely dense; and the great height of the buildings, in which many families dwell under one roof, prevents the free entrance of light and air. A comprehensive scheme of improvement, calculated to cost about £300,000, which was proposed and matured by the late Lord Provost, William Chambers, Esq. of Glenormiston, has made considerable progress. The operations consist in opening up new and wide streets, widening some of the closes, and leaving open spaces where were many of the old houses unfit for human habitation. Several of the formerly crowded and squalid districts have been cleared out, new streets formed, and new houses erected, greatly to the sanitary and moral improvement of the localities. It is expected that the sale of sites in the new streets will defray about a third of the expense; there is a proposal to provide for the rest by taxation extending over a limited term of years.

The Cowgate is a narrow street of the Old Town, to the north of the High street, and nearly parallel to it, at the bottom of the ridge. It contains a great number of brokers' shops, and, with the closes which open from it, is inhabited by Irish more than any other part of the town. The closes are more filthy and wretched than even those of the High street. Of the streets leading southwards from the High street, the two principal ones are carried over the Cowgate by bridges. South Bridge street is the chief outlet from the city to the south. Its prolongation receives the name of Nicholson street, Clerk street, &c., and terminates in the road to Penicuik and Peebles. It is a street of good houses and shops, and in it are the University, Surgeons' Hall, and other fine buildings.

About the same time that Edinburgh began to extend to the north, and the New Town to be built, an extension to the south took place, which, however, was soon arrested, and of which the chief evidence is to be found in George square, closely adjacent to the densely-populated parts of the Old Town, but still the residence of some of the higher classes. More recently, the town has again begun to extend on the south and south west. Newington, on the Penicuik road, is a pleasant suburb, with many fine houses; the village of Morningside, more to the west, has been connected with the town by new buildings, and new streets have sprung up there. Within these few years many new streets have been built, forming a new suburb at the Grange, separated from the Old Town by a pleasant public park, called the Meadows. These quarters have a milder climate than the New Town, being sheltered by Arthur's Seat from the cold and harsh easterly winds; and the view of the Pentland Hills, and of the country to the south and to the west, is very delightful. In like manner, but rather in connection with the New Town, the city has recently begun to extend westward, on the Glasgow road, where Murrayfield, at first a cluster of villas, at some distance from the city, may now be regarded as a suburb. Towards the north, also, the New Town is almost completely connected with Trinity, and groups of villas extend to Granton, Newhaven and Leith.

MONUMENTS.—The monument to Lord Nelson, which stands on the highest rocky eminence, the Calton Hill, is a circular tower, in stages gradually diminishing, 100 feet high; its base is 356 feet above the level of the sea; visitors are permitted to ascend it. This is a conspicuous object from many parts of the city. Monuments to Professor Playfair and Professor Dugald Stewart are placed close together on the Calton Hill. There is also, on the southern side of the hill, near the High School, a monument of Burns; and in the Calton burying ground, a little to the west, is a monment to David Hume. The most striking feature of the Calton Hill, however, is the national monument of Scotland, which was commenced in 1822, to commemorate our victories during the then late war, but was abandoned for want of funds; the twelve columns which decorate the summit of the Calton Hill, bearing the semblance of a ruin, are all there is to show for an expenditure of £13,000—more than £1,000 a column. It is very generally regarded as a monument of national folly. The foundation stone was laid by commissioners specially appointed by George IV. as patron. The original plan was to construct an edifice bearing some resemblance to the renowned Parthenon of Athens, by which the "modern Athens" would be made more like the ancient. The finest monument in Edinburgh, and one which forms a remarkable object even in a general view of the city, is that to Sir Walter Scott. It stands in Princes Street Gardens, and is a beautiful structure, rising to the height of 180 feet, formed on the model of the monumental crosses of the middle ages. In the centre is a marble statue of Scott, with one of his favourite dogs at his feet, the work of John Steell. The design of the monument is by George M. Kemp, a self-taught artist, who died during its erection. In the niches are figures of some of the principal characters of Scott's novels and poems. The public are admitted to the galleries of the monument at a small charge, and the view from them is very fine. The foundation stone of this monument was laid on 15th August, 1840; its inauguration took place in August, 1846. The statue of Charles II., in Parliament square, has been already noticed. The column and statue of Lord Melville have been noticed in our mention of St. Andrew's square. In the same square, opposite the Royal Bank, is a fine equestrian statue of the Earl of Hopetoun. The equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington (by Steell) is placed in front of the Register Office, Princes street. It was erected by public subscription, and represents the "Iron Duke" directing his forces on the field of battle. A fine bronze statue (by Chantrey) of William Pitt stands in the centre of George street, where it is intersected by Frederick street; another statue, by the same artist, of George IV., with royal robes and sceptre, also occupies a place in George street. A fine statue of James Watt is placed in Chambers street. On the esplanade of the castle, there is a bronze statue of the Duke of York, uncle of her present Majesty. A fine monumental statue, in honour of the second Lord Melville, occupies an open space in Melville street, in the western part of the New Town. The most recent additions to the number of the Edinburgh monuments are statues of Allan Ramsay, the poet, John Wilson, the author of the "Noctes Ambrosianæ," &c., Adam Black, the publisher, Sir James Y. Simpson, M.D., and Dean Ramsay. They stand in Princes Street Gardens, facing Princes street, not far from one another. At the east end of St. Colme street is the elegant Eleanor Cross to the memory of the late Miss Catherine Sinclair, the authoress. The Martyrs' Monument, in the old Calton burying ground, is a tall obelisk, erected in 1845, to the memory of several gentlemen who were banished in 1793 for advocating parliamentary reform. A monument of recent erection is that to Mr. Alexander Smith, in Warriston Cemetery; and one of a still later date is the statue of the late Dr. Livingstone, the great African explorer, which was unveiled in the presence of a large assemblage of people, among whom were relatives of the late doctor, by the Lord Provost of the city, in the month of August, 1876. The statue, which is of bronze, stands at the curve where the Waverley bridge opens into Princes street, and is eight feet in height; the pedestal, which is of Binnie freestone, and is twelve feet high, was designed by Sir J. Noel Paton, R.S.S., and in front bears the single word "Livingstone." In Charlotte square, at the end of George street, is the statue of H.R.H. Prince Albert, the inauguration of which took place in August, 1876, on the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to Edinburgh. This statue was originated immediately after his death in December 1861. The design, by Sir John Steell, R.S.A., is that of an equestrian statue, 15 feet high, weighing eight tons, and cast in five pieces, on a granite pedestal, 17 feet in elevation, and 100 tons in weight. The Prince (as a Field-Marshal) is presumably returning the salute of the Volunteers, at the great review held in the Queen's Park, in 1860. The horse is modelled from one of the Duke of Buccleuch's stud, and, viewed from St. George's Church, as above, its handsome proportions, falling mane, and sweeping tail, effectively augment the conception of the portraiture. The total cost of the monument as it stands, with relative improvements in the square, has been about £16,500, of which £12,000 were available for the statue and £3,000 for the pedestal, which, although designed by Sir John Steell primarily, was architecturally proportioned by the late Mr. David Bryce, R.S.A.

Club Houses.—The New Club is a superior building in Princes street. The Caledonian United Service Club is situated in Queen street, the Northern in George street, and a very beautiful building in Princes street for the University Club.

Fuel, Water, &c.—Edinburgh is now well supplied with coal; the different railway companies, the Union Canal, and the neighbouring pits constantly pouring in an ample quantity for the large consumption. The city receives a copious supply of water from the Pentland Hills, where reservoirs have been constructed, from which it is brought by pipes. The supply is constant, and almost entirely of the finest spring water; it is under the management of an incorporated company. No city has purer water than Edinburgh; scarcely a trace of organic matter can be detected in it. There is a large reservoir in the city, on the Castle Hill, for the purpose of regulating the constant service. The water company was incorporated in 1819, previous to which the supply was under the management of the corporation. Edinburgh is illuminated with coal gas, produced by two companies, the works of one of which are situated in Edinburgh, not far from the palace of Holyrood, those of the other at Leith, supplying Leith as well as Edinburgh.

The General Post Office has been already noticed, and the regulations of this establishment are given in another part of the Directory.

The Inland Revenue Office occupies a spacious building in Waterloo place.

The County Buildings stand near the Parliament House, at the corner of the High street and of George IV. Bridge, a street which takes its name from a bridge over the Cowgate. The general plan is taken from one of the finest models of antiquity—the temple of Erectheus, in Athens—while the principal entrance is in the style of the choragic monument of Thrasyllus. The length of the eastern front is nearly one hundred and three feet, and of the northern front fifty-seven. The principal floor contains a large hall, fifty feet in length and twenty-seven in breadth; a court-room, forty four feet long, thirty feet wide, and twenty-eight feet high; a committee-room, &c. Above are offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerks, &c. The building was finished in 1819, at an expense of £15,000. The County buildings having been found insufficient, a beautiful new building was erected in 1868, a little to the south, on George IV. Bridge, for the sheriff's court. It is in the Italian style of architecture, and cost upwards of £44,000.

The Royal Exchange is in High street. It was founded in 1753 and completed in 1761, at a cost of upwards of £31,000. It is quadrangular, and surrounded with offices, among which are the City chambers, Charterhouse, Camberlain's and Session Clerk's offices.

Trade.—Notwithstanding its favourable position, Edinburgh possesses but few manufactures; still there are some departments in which it may justly boast a superiority. Among these may be mentioned linens, shawls, and carpets, tartans, in silk and woollen, cabinet work, &c. There are also manufactories for India rubber goods. Large quantities of printing types, of an excellent description, and lithographic stones, are exported; and the printing and publishing business is carried on to a very great extent, and employs some thousands of hands. Edinburgh ale has long been famous, and there are many extensive breweries in the city that send immense quantities to England and all parts of the world. In banking, Edinburgh takes a high place, and her banking establishments are conducted with a sagacity and accuracy which have secured for them great success; their branches are spread all over Scotland. Sub-offices have also been opened in the city itself. In fire and life assurances there are many establishments of high standing, having branches in the principal towns of the United Kingdom. The banks and insurance companies have commodious, and many of them splendid buildings. The Bank of Scotland, in Bank street; the Commercial, the Union, and the Clydesdale Banks, in George street; the British Linen Company and the Royal Bank of Scotland, in St. Andrew square, are particularly worthy of notice as fine buildings; also those of the Scottish Widows' Fund, the Life Association of Scotland, the Scottish Provident Association, the Standard Life Assurance Company, the Caledonian Insurance Company, the Edinburgh, the Scottish Union and National, the North British and the English and Scottish Law Life Insurance Companies. The Bank of Scotland occupies a very conspicuous situation, looking down upon the narrow valley which separates the Old Town from the New. It is one of the many noble architectural ornaments of a scene which, as viewed from Princes street, from the Mound, and from many other points, is one of the most striking and beautiful that any city can boast; the Free Church College, the National Gallery, the Royal Institution, and the Scott Monument meeting the eye along with it, as well as the castle, with its precipitous front and the adjacent park like slope, the buildings of the Old Town and the New, with the intermediate gardens; whilst, turning to the east, the spectator beholds the Calton Hill, crowned with monuments, and the high summit of Arthur's Seat; or looking to the west, the far extending garden closed by buildings, among which St. Cuthbert's Church and St. John's (episcopal) Church, standing near together are the most notable. Except the Bank of Scotland all the banks and all the insurance companies have their principal seats of business in the New Town, although many of the principal business establishments of other kinds are in the Old Town. The amount of business in life assurance and annuities done by the Edinburgh insurance companies is very great; their aggregate income is considerably over two millions sterling, and there is not one of them of which the stability is not perfectly unquestionable. The Bank of Scotland is the oldest banking company in Scotland, and thus naturally assumed the name which it still bears, for it has nothing of that character of a national institution which the Bank of England in some measure possesses. It was established, however, by act of parliament (the parliament of Scotland), in 1695. Next to it in antiquity is the Royal Bank of Scotland, incorporated by royal charter in 1727. The British Linen Company, now merely a bank, but at first also engaged in the linen trade, was incorporated by royal charter in 1746. After this came the Commercial Bank, established in 1810, and the National Bank of Scotland, established in 1825. The Union Bank of Scotland, incorporated by act of parliament in 1862, is the representative of several banks, one of which was originally a company engaged not only in banking, but in the tobacco trade, and was founded in Edinburgh not very long after the Royal Bank. After it had become a mere banking company, it was long one of the chief banks of Edinburgh, under the name of Sir William Forbes & Co. Having united with a Glasgow bank, it assumed its present name, and it has head offices both in Edinburgh and Glasgow. The Clydesdale Banking Company, a Glasgow banking company of recent origin, and having its head office in Glasgow, represents in Edinburgh the Edinburgh and Leith Bank, afterwards, in consequence of a union, known as the Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank.

The Union Bank has the greatest authorised note circulation of any bank in Scotland, £454,346. Next to it is the British Linen Company, £438,924. The authorised circulation of the Commercial Bank is £374,880; that of the Bank of Scotland is £343,418; of the Royal Bank, £216,451; the National Bank, £297,024; and the Clydesdale Bank, £274,321. The average actual circulation, based in part, under Sir Robert Peel's Act of 1845, on the coin held by the banks, is £4,294,687. The price of stock or shares of all the banks gives proof of their prosperity. The banking business of Glasgow is in great part conducted by the banks having their head offices in Edinburgh, as is also that of all the provincial towns of Scotland. The Scottish banking companies were at one time far more numerous, but the tendency of late has been towards the incorporation of the minor banks with the great banks of Edinburgh and Glasgow. From Edinburgh there are many means of transit to all parts of the united kingdom, by rail, road, sea, and inland navigation. There are two railway stations in Edinburgh—that of the North British Company, between Princes street and the Old Town, and that of the Caledonian Company, at the head of Princes street. From the former of these stations lines radiate in all directions, except to the south-west, to which those of the Caledonian Company chiefly extend. Extensive railway systems, with many branch lines, belong to both companies. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line, with its branches, is now in the hands of the North British Company. A valuable means of water carriage is furnished by the Union Canal, between Edinburgh and Glasgow, joining the Great Canal near Larbert, but the traffic on it has much diminished since the opening of railways. The basin of the canal is situated about half a mile south-west of the castle, and is called Port Hopetoun; the completion of it, in 1822, caused a great metamorphosis in this quarter of the city, which, previously rural, is now environed by wharves and warehouses.

MUNICIPAL, LEGAL, AND NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS AND COURTS OF LAW.

The chief magistrate of Edinburgh is the Lord Provost, whose office, both as it respects its dignity and its duties, resembles that of the Lord Mayor of London, while the functions of the six bailies are analogous to those of the aldermen. The town council is composed of twenty-five members, elected by the several wards into which the city is divided, one-third part of whom go out annually in rotation. The Lord Provost holds office for three years. The treasurer, the dean of guild, and the convenor of trades are also office-bearers of high consideration. There are fourteen incorporated trades, which we shall briefly notice. The Surgeons, with whom the Barbers were formerly associated, were constituted by a "seal of cause" in 1705, and several crown charters subsequently. The barbers were separated from them in 1722 by decree of the Court of Session; and in 1778 the surgeons were incorporated by royal charter under the title of the "Royal College of Surgeons." The hall for the meetings of this society is in Nicolson street, and is a beautiful building, containing an extensive and valuable museum, chiefly of anatomical and pathological preparations. It was erected in 1833, at a cost of £20,000. The Goldsmiths, formerly attached to the Hammermen, were constituted by a "seal of cause" in 1581; their hall is in South Bridge street. The Skinners or Glovers, incorporated in 1586, have their hall in Skinner's close. The Furriers were formed by act of council in 1593, and the Hammermen in 1483—the latter at first consisted of blacksmiths, goldsmiths, lorimers, saddlers, cutlers, and armourers. The goldsmiths were separated from them in 1581. They meet in the Chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, in the Cowgate. The Wrights and Masons were constituted in 1475, but by a decree of the Court of Session, in 1703, the bowmakers, glaziers, plumbers, and upholsterers were added to the masons; and to the wrights were attached the painters, slaters, sieve-wrights, and coopers. This incorporation assembles in St. Mary's Chapel, Burnet's close. The Tailors were incorporated in 1500; to this society anciently belonged the superiority and direction of all the tailors within the suburbs of Edinburgh and the town of Leith, and they still retain superiority over those in the more ancient suburbs. The Bakers were in existence as a corporate body before 1522, but the exact period of their constitution is unknown. The Fleshers (or Butchers) were formed in 1488; the Cordwainers (or shoemakers) in 1475; the Websters (or Weavers) in 1530; and the Hatters in 1684. The Bonnet Makers were incorporated in 1500, and in 1684 the trade of Litster or (Dyer) was united with them, but the original name is still retained. The Candle Makers were chartered by the magistrates in 1517, and confirmed by royalty in 1597, and again in 1695. The burgh of Canongate, though now an integral part of Edinburgh, has its distinct incorporation of trades, comprising the eight following trades:—Skinnermen, Tailors, Wrights, Bakers, Shoemakers, Weavers, Fleshers and Barbers. The magistrates of Edinburgh hold criminal and civil courts, and there is a small debt court held in the council-chamber every Monday morning at ten o'clock. The Dean of Guild Court grants licenses for the erection of buildings and condemns insecure ones.

The Gaol is situated on the south side of the Calton hill; it was completed in 1817, and is in the Saxon style of architecture; the length of it is 194 feet, and the depth of it 40; it has four storeys, and in the centre is a chapel and a house for the governor, from which he can observe all that passes within—the system of classification being adopted. Separated from this prison by a high wall is the Bridewell, with the house of the governor in front.

The Lock-up House is at the back of the Parliament House, and is for the reception of offenders under examination, for the refractory in the police court, for those unable to accomplish bail or fines, and for convicts to pass the last mournful night in prior to their execution. The Canongate Tolbooth might have been mentioned among the relics of antiquity. It is a gloomy but picturesque building, of the end of the 16th century, with corner turrets, a small spire, a clock fixed in a wooden projection, and an outside stair. The Police establishment was remodelled 1822. The Police Office is situated in High street. The lord provost, the bailies of the city, and the sheriff-substitutes are at the head of it, along with delegates from the wards of the city. A criminal court is held daily, where a bailie presides, and the sheriff holds a similar court every day for offences out of the bounds of the royalty.

Before the Scottish Burgh Reform Act—which was passed in 1833—the corporation of Edinburgh was of a close character, though not altogether without an admixture of popular representation. Since the passing of this act, the city has been divided into wards or districts, with special places for polling. There are at present thirteen wards. The city returns two members to the House of Commons, and the county of Edinburgh one. The present members for the city are James Cowan, Esq. and T. R. Buchanan, Esq.; the member for the county is the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Courts of Law and Legal Institutions.—College of Justice.—This incorporated body, constituted in 1532, as has been stated in our historical narrative, comprehends all the functionaries connected with the supreme courts, including the judges (who are styled its senators), the faculty of advocates, writers to the signet, solicitors, clerks to the judges, extractors, and the keepers of the different departments.

The Court of Session and Teind Court.—The court of session, the highest civil court in Scotland, originally consisted of 14 judges and a president, one half of the judges and the president being churchmen, and the king having the privilege of appointing three or four peers or lords of his great council to sit and vote with the lords of session. Ecclesiastics were appointed judges, even after the Reformation. Till 1808, the judges all sat in one court; but it was then divided into two separate courts, known as the First Division and the Second Division, which, however, might be brought together in cases of difficulty. In 1810, the junior judges were appointed to sit separately as Lords Ordinary, each trying cases in the first instance. In 1830 the number of judges was reduced to thirteen, and so it continues. The Lords Ordinary are five in number, forming what is called the Outer House; the First Division and Second Division, consisting of four judges each, form the Inner House. The Lord President presides over the First Division, and over the united court; the Lord Justice Clerk over the Second Division. The Lords Ordinary may be called in to take part in the hearing of a case in the whole court. Cases may be carried from the Lords Ordinary to the Inner House, but only to that division of it to which the Lord Ordinary is attached who tried the case in the first instance. The junior Lord Ordinary acts as Lord Ordinary of Bills, disposing of summary petitions and business requiring special despatch; but during the vacations of the court this office is taken by all the judges in rotation, except the Lord President and the Lord Justice Clerk. The judges of the court of session are appointed for life, and are always members of the Faculty of Advocates. They assume titles like those of peers, prefixing Lord either to their surname or to the name of an estate. The judgment of the Court of Session may be appealed to the House of Lords. In 1815, trial by jury was introduced in civil cases in Scotland, to the extent of deciding as to matters of fact and fixing the amount of damages. Jury trials are presided over by one or more of the judges of the Court of Session. The jury in civil cases consists of twelve jurymen, and a unanimous verdict is received at once; but if they cannot all agree the verdict of a majority of nine is received after a certain time. The Teind Court is held every alternate Wednesday during term, and has the power of regulating and enforcing the payment of tithes or teinds; for the clergy cannot themselves exact their tithes, which are obtained from the landowners, and not from tenants; it is through the medium of this court only they receive them. It belongs to this court to determine the amount of stipend which the clergyman of each parish shall receive out of the teinds of that parish, granting augmentations from time to time, when the teinds are not already exhausted. The judges of the Inner House of the Court of Session and one Lord Ordinary are the judges of this court.

The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal court, and is presided over by the Lord Justice General, which office is held by the Lord President of the Court of Session. Next to him and really the first acting judge, is the Lord Justice Clerk, subordinate to whom are five other judges, who are also Lords of Session. At stated times, the Lords of Justiciary proceed on circuits, holding courts in different towns. The Lord Advocate is the public prosecutor, and by him actions are raised in this court, according to his discretion. The causes which come before this court are tried by a jury of fifteen persons, a majority of whom decide the same, from which there is no appeal.

The Commissary Court.—Since the year 1830, the duties which this court formerly performed have been transferred to the Court of Session; still, however, a commissary and three deputies take cognisance of testaments of persons dying abroad, having property in Scotland.

The Court of Exchequer.—This court, which till recently was presided over by a chief baron and three ordinary barons, has undergone such a change as to be virtually abolished. The duties are now performed by certain judges of the Court of Session, in rotation.

The Lyon Court, which is nearly obselete, formerly regulated state pageants, executed the writs of supreme courts, and decided upon armorial bearings. In the execution of the duties still remaining, the "Lord Lyon" is assisted by a body of messengers-at-arms, heralds, and pursuivants.

The Faculty of Advocates.—The members of this society occupy a position similar to that of barristers in England. It appears to have been instituted about the same time as the College of Justice (1532), and was at first limited to ten members. Although candidates for admission are not required to follow any prescribed course of preparatory study, they must pass a tolerably strict examination—first on civil law, and then, after the lapse of a year, on the laws of Scotland. An advocate when admitted, is privileged to plead in any court in Scotland (unless debarred by special statute, as in the Small Debts Acts), and also before the House of Lords. It is from this society, too, that the bench is supplied with judges, and that the sheriffs of counties are selected. Though possessing no charter of incorporation, it has always exercised corporate privileges, by electing its own office-bearers, the principal of whom is the president, or, as he is styled, the Dean of Faculty. The library, which is by far the largest, as well as the most valuable, in Scotland, will be described hereafter.

The Writers to the Signet are an important body, who have the sole right of passing warrants under the seal or signet of the reign-monarch, in order to render them valid; in addition to which, they act as conveyancers, and as attorneys in the supreme courts. This body, besides its other functionaries, has a professor of conveyancing in the University of Edinburgh. The qualifications for admission are an apprenticeship for five years, after two years' previous study at the university, attendance on a course of lectures on conveyancing, and on the Roman and Scottish law. The members of this body amount to about 350; they have a valuable library, and an ample fund for widows.

The Solicitors before the Supreme Court, as an association, were first publicly acknowledged in 1754, by an act of sederunt of the Court of Session, in which were set forth rules for their direction; these rules were altered and improved by another act in 1772. In 1797, they obtained a royal charter, which erected them into a body corporate, by the title Solicitors in the Court of Session, the High Court of Justiciary, and the Commission of Teinds. Members of this corporation are required to attend three classes of the Scotch law and conveyancing, previous to admission.

Solicitors at Law were incorporated by royal charter, 1780; they practice before the Sheriff, Commissary, and City Courts. Intrants, or candidates for admission, are required to serve a regular apprenticeship, and after going through a private examination before the society, are sent up to a public one before the judges.

Sheriff Court.—The Lord Lieutenant of a Scottish county is the Sheriff Principal, but performs no duties in that capacity. The real sheriff of a county is styled Sheriff Depute, but is wholly independent of the Sheriff Principal. He is appointed by the crown, and must be an advocate of three years' standing. He presides at elections of members of parliament, and revises the list of electors. He also acts as a judge, both in civil and criminal causes. There is an appeal from his judgement in civil cases to the Court of Session. He holds his office for life. He has power to appoint a Sheriff Substitute, who must also be an advocate of three years' standing, and who generally tries cases in the first instance, and, in absence of the Sheriff Depute, can discharge many of his duties. He also holds office for life. The Sheriff Depute is bound to attend the sittings of the Supreme Court in Edinburgh; the Sheriff Substitute resides in the county in which he has jurisdiction. There are sometimes several Sheriff's Substitute. In Edinburgh there are three. The sheriffs in Edinburgh hold courts three times a week in Edinburgh, and once a week in Leith. A sheriff's Small Debt Court is also held twice a week in Edinburgh, and once a week in Leith.

The Justice of Peace Court is of no earlier origin in Scotland than 1609. The Justices are empowered to judge in cases of breaches of the peace; to regulate highways, bridges, and ferries; to see the laws executed against vagrants, beggars, transgressors of the game laws, and frauds against the revenue, besides many other branches of jurisdiction. But the principal business of the justices in Edinburgh comes before them as a court for a speedy settlement of debts under £5, commonly called the Small Debt Court, which sits weekly in Edinburgh, and at longer intervals in the different villages of the country.

The Convention of Royal Burghs, instituted by James III., meets annually in Edinburgh, and consists of two deputies from each burgh. The Lord Provost of Edinburgh is perpetual president, and the city clerk of Edinburgh is clerk of the convention. This court had considerable powers until the passing of the Burgh Reform Act, but is now much like a national chamber of commerce. The place of meeting is an aisle of the church of St. Giles, in Edinburgh.

The Register House is the depository for the state papers, public records, title deeds of property, and all legal contracts and mortgages. The records of all suits at law, and the various documents which have been produced in actions before the supreme courts, are also placed here; and in virtue of a late act, the parish registers of births and marriages have been collected here, whilst here are deposited the returns of births, marriages, and deaths sent in by the registrars from all parts of Scotland. This establishment, important as it is, is almost peculiar to Scotland. The collection of documents deposited here is immense, and is, of course, accumulating; but few are of ancient date, for the greater part of the papers relating to this kingdom, prior to the Restoration, were carried away, at a very early period, by Edward I., and at a later era by Cromwell; and a considerable portion of those that were suffered to remain were unfortunately lost, or destroyed in consequence of a fire in 1700. The most ancient state papers in this house are the letter of the Scottish barons to the Pope in 1320, and the acts of settlement of the Scottish crown upon the Stuarts in 1371 and 1373. The building is situated at the east end of Princes street, fronting the North bridge; it was planned by Robert Adam, and is a fine specimen of the Italian style. The frontage is 200 feet, and the width 120; the extended front is relieved by a pediment and Corinthian pilasters above the entrance. The structure is square, with a circular saloon in the centre, surmounted by a lead-covered dome, 50 feet in diameter. The Register House was finished in 1822, and the cost was defrayed in part by a grant from George III., of £12,0000, arising from the sale of forfeited estates, and the remainder by the Government, which also provided for its maintenance. The front of the building is ornamented by an equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, by Steell. Behind the principal building is a new one, additional to it, also in Italian style, completed in 1860, which cost £26,440. The supreme manager is termed the Depute-Clerk Register. In consequence of the greatly increased demand for space to transact the official business belonging to this important department of the public service, a very large addition was made immediately behind the site of the house where once Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, Christopher North, and their jovial companions were wont to meet, and at which place the scene of the famous "Noctes Ambrosianæ" is laid.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

Established Church.—The parochial churches of Edinburgh are erected and maintained out of the funds of the burgh; from the same source, and from the port dues at Leith and Port Hopetoun, the stipends of the ministers are derived. There are thirteen parishes, of which the ministers receive a stipend of £600 a year, within what was the old parish of Edinburgh; whilst St. Cuthbert's or the West Church, and the Canongate, also old parishes, are provided with stipends from other sources. Several churches have also recently been erected by voluntary subscription of which the ministers are maintained without burden to the funds of the city. It will be enough to notice only those ecclesiastical edifices which are most important as architectual features of the city, or from historic associations.

St. Giles's Cathedral.—This spacious and venerable metropolitan church stands on an elevated site, in the High street, forming one side of Parliament square, and before the alterations and repairs, which took place between 1830 and 1832, its shape was cruciform, and its dimensions as follows:—Length from east to west, 206 feet; breadth at the centre, 129 feet; at the west end, 110 feet; and at the east, 76 feet. A square tower rises from the centre, surmounted by a crown, formed of intersecting richly-ornamented arches; from the apex of the crown springs a small spire, the summit of which is 161 feet in height, and may be seen from a great distance. The renovation of the church has altered a little its original form, as well as its dimensions. Of St. Giles, the patron saint, little more is known than that he was born in Greece, in the sixth century, and died in France. One of his arm bones, enshrined in silver, was deposited in the church, which was erected in the fifteenth century, on the site of the former parish church of Edinburgh. It was made a collegiate church by James III., in 1466, and was partitioned into four churches after the reformation, when it was appropriated to the Presbyterian worship then established. When episcopacy was introduced into the Protestant Church of Scotland, and Charles I. made Edinburgh a bishopric, which it had never been in Roman Catholic times, this was made the cathedral. Since 1688 it has been used for the Presbyterian worship of the Scottish Established Church, and now consists of three separate places of worship, called the High Church, the Tolbooth Church, and the Old Church, the chief of which is the High Church, wherein the civil, judicial, and ecclesiastical dignitaries are accustomed to worship. It is proper to mention that the Government contributed £10,000 towards the alterations made in 1830-2. St. Giles has been the scene of important historical events. Here John Knox preached; and here James VI. bade farewell to his Scottish subjects, before his departure to take possession of the throne of England. Here Jenny Geddes struck the first blow at the episcopacy of Laud, when she hurled the old stool on which she had been sitting at the head of the dean as he began to read from the book of Common Prayer. It was in this church also that the solemn league and covenant was signed by a committee of the Scottish Parliament and the English commissioners in 1643. It was in 1872 again restored to its original proportions as a cathedral.

The want of a cathedral for the see of Edinburgh having long been felt, suggestions were from time to time made that one should be built worthy of the city designated the "Modern Athens." The propositions at length took a tangible shape, and in 1873 the designs, after competition, of Sir Gilbert Scott were accepted. The cathedral, which is dedicated to St. Mary, and was consecrated in October, 1879, stands at the west end of Melville street, and is an elegant structure, erected through the liberality of the Misses Walker.

Trinity College Church, although no longer in existence, must not be unnoticed; it stood at the foot of Leith wynd, and the principal access to it was by the Low Calton. It was founded by Mary of Gueldres, Queen of James II., in the year 1462, and was an elegant building of the perfect Gothic order, and in cathedral form; but its original plan was never completed, for only the choir, or eastern part, and the transept were erected. It continued to be used as the parish church of a particular district until 1848, when the fabric was acquired by the North British Railway Company, for the sum of £18,325 sterling, and demolished to make way for that railway

New and Old Greyfriars' Churches.—The old Greyfriars' Church, which is situated not far from the Grassmarket, was founded in the year 1612, where formerly stood a monastery of the Franciscans or Greyfriars. In 1650 the interior of the church was burned by Cromwell's soldiers. The spire, which was used as a powder magazine, was unfortunately destroyed by an explosion on the 7th of May, 1718. The magistrates built a new church at the western end of the old one in 1721, at the expense of £3,045. The old church was burnt, in consequence of the overheating of a flue, in 1845, but has since been rebuilt. It was in old Greyfriars' Church, and in the churchyard adjacent, that the National Covenant was signed in 1638.

The Tron Church, so called from a tron or weighing machine which formerly stood near it, and to which, in former times, it was customary to nail false notaries and other malefactors by the ears, is situated in the High street, at the corner of South Bridge street. An inscription on the doorway informs the reader that it was formerly called Christ Church, and consecrated in 1647. The front, towards High street, is handsome, with a main and two side doorways, with semi-Gothic windows, and the base of a turret in the centre, ornamented with pilasters. The original steeple was destroyed by fire in 1824, and the present very ornamental one was erected in 1828.

Lady Yester's Church, in Infirmary street, was originally founded in 1647, principally by the munificence of Margaret Kerr, Lady Yester. It was taken down in 1803, and the present elegant Gothic building was erected on its site. Canongate church, a Gothic building in the form of a cross, founded in 1688, was built at the expense of £2 400, from a legacy left by Thomas Moodie, a pious citizen of Edinburgh. This church has two ministers, one nominated by the Crown, the other by the town council and inhabitants of Canongate. Many distinguished persons repose in the church yard; Adam Smith, Dugald Stewart, and Ferguson the poet, among the number. The gravestone of the latter was placed here by the poet Burns. The visitor will be struck by the rows of iron coffins which appear here on the surface of the ground. —St. Cuthbert's Church, or the West Kirk, situated near the base of the rock on which the castle stands, is a plain building with a spire, and is said to be the largest place of worship in Edinburgh. It has two tiers of galleries. The burial ground is spacious, and many of the monuments are costly.—St. Andrew's Church stands on the north side of George Street, in the New Town. It is surmounted with a fine tapering spire, 168 feet high, in which is a chime of eight bells. The whole is elegantly finished. The church is an oval. It has an historical celebrity, as the scene of the disruption of the Church of Scotland, which took place at the meeting of the General Assembly on the 18th of May, 1843.—St. George's Church, on the west side of Charlotte square, forms the terminating object of George street. The dome, which is seen to advantage in almost every direction, was intended as a miniature representation of that of St. Paul's, London. The building cost £33,000, and is calculated to contain 1,600 people. It was erected in 1814.—St. Mary's Church in Bellevue crescent, was erected in 1824, at a cost of £13,000. It has a Corinthian portico and an elegant spire, 186 feet high. The church will contain 1,800 people.—St. Stephen's Church stands in St. Vincent street; its architecture is in the mixed Roman style, its shape octagonal, with a tower 163 feet high. It was erected in 1828, and cost £25,000, and will accommodate 1,600 hearers.—There are altogether twenty-six places of worship belonging to the Established church in Edinburgh, of which three have two ministers each.—The Assembly Hall of the Established church, also called the Victoria Hall or Victoria church, is one of the noblest buildings in Edinburgh. It was built in 1844, and cost £16,000. It has a lofty and extremely beautiful spire, and occupies a commanding situation on the Castle Hill, fronting the Lawn market. It is the place of meeting of the General Assembly.

Scottish Episcopal Church.—This communion possesses many places of worship in Edinburgh, several of which are very fine buildings. The service is conducted after the ritual of the Church of England. Scotland is divided by this body into seven dioceses, over which preside the same number of bishops. The clergy are mainly supported from the produce of the pew rents.—St Paul's, Carrubber's close, High street, is the oldest episcopal chapel in Edinburgh. It certainly existed in 1734, and perhaps much earlier; it was long the chief place of worship for the Jacobites in the last century; it is very plain. For many years the names of the reigning Hanoverian family were rigidly excluded from the devotional services of this chapel.—St John's, at the west end of Princes street, is in the florid Gothic style, with a tower of 120 feet in height, and was finished in 1817, at a cost of £15,000. The eastern window is of stained glass, as are also the windows above the pillars, and as this is the chapel in which ordinations take place, the interior is fitted up with appropriate conveniences and much elegance; the west end possesses a fine organ and choir. The remains of Sir William Hamilton are interred in a vault connected with this chapel. St. Paul's, York place, is also Gothic, with four octagonal towers at its angles; it has buttresses surmounted with pinnacles. The conspicuous situation which it occupies, at the corner of York place and Broughton street, is felicitous for the display of its beauty. In one of its four turrets hangs a bell formerly used in the chapel royal of Holyrood. The organ is considered the finest in Scotland; it was built in Germany. This chapel was erected in 1818, and cost £12,000. The Bishop of Edinburgh usually officiates in this church. Trinity Church is a fine building, admirably situated at Dean bridge. St. Peter's is another fine new building, with a spire, in Lutton place, Newington. There are two Episcopalian chapels in Edinburgh connected with the Church of England, and not under the bishop of the Scottish Episcopalian Church.

United Presbyterian Church.—This body of Presbyterian dissenters have over twenty places of worship in Edinburgh, some of them large. Nicolson Street Church is on the west side of Nicolson street, and its lofty Gothic front is very commanding. The fine Saxon arch of the doorway springs from two sculptured human heads. For many years, Dr. Jamieson, the compiler of the "Scottish Dictionary," was the minister of this numerous congregation.—Broughton Place Church is a massive building, with a portico and Doric columns; it will contain 1,600 worshippers.—Rose Street Church is a handsome building, in the eastern division of Rose street, and is very capacious.—Newington U. P. Church, a recent erection, in Causewayside, is an ornament to that neighbourhood.—The United Presbyterian Church, which has Presbyteries in England as well as in Scotland, holds a meeting of synod annually in Edinburgh, a little while before the meeting of the general assemblies of the Established and Free Churches. The place of meeting is a spacious hall in Queen street, erected for this purpose.

Free Church of Scotland.—This, which is the largest of the non-established churches of Scotland, holds the meetings of its General Assembly in Edinburgh annually, at the same time with that of the Established Church. These meetings take place in a beautiful hall erected for the purpose, and capable of containing from 1,600 to 1,800 persons. This hall is situated behind the Free Church College, through the quadrangle, which is the principal entrance to it, a broad flight of steps leading up. The hall was erected in 1858-59.—The Free Church College, a theological seminary, stands at the head of the Mound, and is a very beautiful edifice in the Elizabethan style, designed by Mr. Playfair, founded in 1846, and consisting of a quadrangle, 84 feet by 56, with two centre towers 121 feet in height, and a tower at the north east corner 95 feet in height. The college has a staff of five theological professors, besides a lecturer on Natural Science. It has a valuable theological library. The Free Church has also theological seminaries in Glasgow and Aberdeen. It has near forty places of worship in Edinburgh, some of them very beautiful buildings, adorned with lofty spires, as Free St. Mary's, at the corner of Albany street and Broughton street, Barclay Church in Bruntsfield Links, and Free Buccleuch Church, near George square—Free St. John's, near the Victoria Hall, and Free New North Church, near the Greyfriars Churches are also worthy of notice.

Baptists, Congregationalists, &c. — There are six Baptist churches in Edinburgh. One place of worship, in Dublin street, is a beautiful building. There are only three Congregationalist churches, and the only place of worship of any external beauty is Augustine Chapel, on George IV. bridge. The places of worship of minor Protestant denominations do not deserve special notice.

Roman Catholics.—The principal Roman Catholic Church, St. Mary's, occupies a site near York place, in Broughton street, and is a handsome Gothic edifice; it was built by subscription in 1813, and cost £8,000. It has a very fine organ; and above the altar is an excellent painting by Vandyke, representing a dead Saviour. There is a second chapel (St. Patrick's), of smaller dimensions, in Cowgate; and a large Roman Catholic place of worship, called the Church of the Second Heart, lighted by cupolas, is situated in Lauriston street.

EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENTS AND INSTITUTIONS FOR LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

The University.—Edinburgh could not boast of a university at an early period. Robert Reid, Bishop of Orkney, left a bequest of 8,000 merks in 1558 for the purpose of founding one, and the magistrates in consequence purchased part of the ground on which the university now stands, which was then quite out of the town. There stood the house called Kirk o' Field, where Darnley, the husband of Queen Mary, was murdered in 1567. Some of the church property confiscated at the Reformation was assigned for the support of the proposed university. In the year 1579 a collection of books was bequeathed to it by Mr. Clement Little, as a foundation for a library. The building was begun in 1580; a charter of erection was granted by James VI. in 1582; and in the year following the college was opened for the reception of students, although at first with only one class and one regent or teacher. In 1617 James was so pleased with the progress which his favourite university had made that he honoured the establishment by calling it "The College of King James." In 1619 Sir William Nisbet, provost of Edinburgh, gave 1,000 Scots (£83 6s. 8d. sterling) toward the maintenance of a professor of divinity. The Protector Cromwell endowed the university with an annuity of £200 sterling. William III. also bestowed on it £300 a year, but part of this grant was afterwards withdrawn by Queen Anne. By an Act of Parliament passed in 1858, for the regulation of Scotch universities, a General Council of the University of Edinburgh has been constituted, consisting of the principal, professors, graduates, and persons who, before August, 1861, satisfied the University Commissioners of their having completed a certain course of attendance at the university. The affairs of the university are now immediately under the care of the University Court, which was constituted at the same time. The General Council has the right of electing a Chancellor, who holds office for life; and on the 28th October, 1859, Lord Brougham, an alumnus of the university, was elected its first chancellor. The University Court consists of the rector, the principal, the lord provost of Edinburgh, and five assessors. The Act of 1858 took from the town council of Edinburgh not only the government of the university but the patronage of its chairs, which was transferred to seven curators, three of whom are nominated by the University Court and four by the town council. The number of professors is now 37, classified into the four faculties of theology, law, medecine, and the arts, the last named including literature and general science. The school of medicine in this university, which has since risen to so much eminence, was first founded in 1721. Some of the present medical professors are among the most distinguished men in Europe, and the University of Edinburgh has in former times had men of equal eminence not only in medical but other faculties, of whom it may be enough to mention Dugald Stewart, Sir William Hamilton, and Dr. Chalmers. The students are not obliged to adopt any particular mode of living or of dress. None of them live within the walls of the college, as at Oxford and Cambridge. The winter session begins in the first week of November and terminates in April. The summer session for medical students only, extends over the months of May, June, and July. Students are attracted to Edinburgh, not only from every part of the British dominions, but from almost every nation in Europe, and every State in America. The old building being found too small, part of it was taken down, and the present one begun in 1789. The architect was Mr. Robert Adam. But the sum collected, though large, being far from sufficient for the erection of a building of such elegance and magnitude, it was necessarily stopped. In 1815, however, Parliament made a yearly grant of £10,000, for ten years, to be expended in the completion of the building, under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by Parliament. A handsome portico, supported by stone columns of the Doric order, twenty-six feet high, forms the chief entrance. The east and west sides are 255 feet in length, and the south and north 356 feet. The design of the interior quadrangle is by Mr. Playfair.

The University Museum and the Industrial Museum of Scotland.—Sir Andrew Balfour, to whom Edinburgh owes the institution of the botanic gardens, was also the founder of the University Museum of Natural History. His collections, which were very extensive, were placed, after his death, in 1694, in the hall of the College; and in 1867, Sir John Sibbald presented the college with a great variety of curiosities, both native and exotic; but from neglect it was almost completely destroyed. This museum has since been enriched by various and extensive collections, particularly by the purchase of the magnificent one of M. Dufresne, of Paris; and the collection of birds alone contains upwards of 3,000 specimens, besides minerals, &c. The whole collection is exceeded by few in Europe. It was some time ago removed from the place which it formerly occupied in the University to the Industrial Museum of Scotland, which has been erected behind the University, and the foundation stone of which was laid by His Royal Highness Prince Albert on the same day with that of the new General Post-office. It is a beautiful building; and, although the design is not yet completed, it affords ample space for the existing collections. The collection of specimens illustrative of the arts—raw materials, progress and processes of manufacture, implements, and machines, products, &c.—is probably unrivalled in the world. It was begun by the late lamented Dr. George Wilson, Professor of Technology in the University of Edinburgh.

The University Library is valuable and extensive, and contains many interesting historical documents. It formerly enjoyed the right to claim a copy of every book entered at Stationers' Hall, but now receives, instead, an annual sum of £575. The only other funds for its support are 10s. paid by each student for his matriculation ticket, and £5 paid by each professor on his admission. The volumes, which are under the care of a librarian and his deputy, amount to about 133,000, besides 700 volumes of MSS. There are several curious and valuable manuscripts, such as the protest of the Bohemian nobles against the burning of John Huss; the original marriage of Queen Mary with the Dauphin of France, and a vellum copy of Fordun's "Scotichronicon." The books are deposited in a hall 198 feet long by 50 wide, one of the noblest rooms in Scotland.

The present grammar school, called the High School, was established in the year 1578. At first it contained only a master and an usher, but before the end of the century it was established nearly in the form which it has borne to the present time. The great increase of scholars having rendered the former building insufficient, the foundation of a new school was laid in 1777; but this being afterwards found too narrow in its limits, the present elegant structure, which graces the south side of the Calton Hill, was commenced in 1825. It is in the Grecian style, 270 feet in length, with a centre and two side wings. The centre has a very tasteful portico, supported by Doric columns; and the building is finely displayed upon a rocky terrace, elevated ten feet above the level of the road. The playground is nearly two acres in extent. The cost of this edifice was £30,000. The magistrates and town council are the patrons; and the education imparted is of a first-class character. The High School of Edinburgh has long been of very high repute as a seminary of learning.

The Edinburgh Academy is a handsome and capacious structure in Henderson row, erected in 1824. Its object is the education of the youth of the higher classes upon a system similar to that of the High School, for which purpose a fund was raised by shares of £50 each, amounting to nearly £13,000. The appointments are filled by gentlemen of high attainments in their respective departments. In Edinburgh, besides the above, there are many private academies and lecture-rooms for classical and medical instruction, superintended by able teachers and professors.

The Royal College of Physicians was incorporated in 1681, by a charter, in which it is provided that they shall, at least twice in a year, visit all the apothecaries' shops within the city and liberties of Edinburgh, and destroy all damaged drugs. The hall, which is in Queen street, contains a library and museum of materia medica.

The Royal College of Surgeons was incorporated in 1778, and is possessed of a most valuable museum; the bequest of Dr. Barclay's, and the purchase of Mr. Bell's, in addition to what has been otherwise acquired, have rendered their collection of anatomical preparations perhaps unequalled in Great Britain. The hall is in Nicolson street, and is a noble edifice in the Grecian style, with a portico in front, supported by fluted Ionic columns. It was erected in 1833, at a cost of £20,000. The Royal Medical Society has an extensive library and museum.

The Royal Botanic Gardens.—The first botanic garden in Scotland was formed by Sir Andrew Balfour, who was soon after assisted in his meritorious exertions by Mr. Patrick Murray, of Livingstone, and Sir Robert Sibbald. The Royal Botanic Garden, which was formed by Dr. John Hope, in 1767, was situated on the west side of the road to Leith; but was removed to a situation now in Inverleith row. It occupies 27 acres. The palm house is one of the largest in Britain, except that at Kew, and contains some magnificent specimens. The other hot houses are extensive. Strangers are readily admitted to visit this garden.

The Advocates' Library, by far the most valuable in Scotland, was founded by Sir George Mackenzie, in 1682. In addition to a large collection of manuscripts, relating chiefly to civil and ecclesiastical history of Scotland, it contains nearly 200,000 volumes of books. Thomas Ruddiman, the Latinist, and David Hume, the historian, were amongst its librarians. It is one of the five public libraries which still enjoy the privilege of receiving a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom. It is distinguished by the liberality of its management—every respectable applicant being freely permitted to consult its contents.

The Library of Writers to the Signet was formed about the middle of last century, and has a large annual fund for its increase and support. It is very rich in the departments of British and Irish history, antiquities, topography, and biography; it comprises about 50,000 volumes. The signet library, advocates' library, exchequer chambers, and court-room, communicate with the large hall of the Parliament House. Besides these libraries, Edinburgh possesses subscription ones, of which may be specially mentioned that of the Philosophical Institution, in Queen street, connected with which there is an excellent reading room, well stored with reviews, magazines, and newspapers.

The Royal Institution arose in 1819, and was incorporated in 1827, for the encouragement of the fine arts. The apartments of the institution are in a magnificent building, situate on the north end of the Earthen Mound, in Princes street; it is from a design by Playfair, and is of the Doric order, with fluted columns ranging on each side; in the front is a third range, supporting a pediment, on which is now placed a statue of the Queen, by Steell. The building which was commenced in 1823, cost £40,000. It contains a sculpture gallery of casts, a school of art, the rooms of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Board of Manufactures, the Fishery Board, and the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, also the Museum of that society, now the property of the nation, and very rich in objects of interest.

The National Gallery is immediately south of the Royal Institution, on the Earthen Mound; it was built in 1850-54, at a cost of £40,000, and is a building of the Ionic order, from a design by Mr. Playfair. There are two suites of octagonal rooms; the western contains the National Gallery of painting and sculpture, in which, besides specimens of the old masters, are some admirable works of more recent painters; the eastern is used for the annual exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy, which is one of the great attractions of the city during the months of March, April, and May. In this building may be seen Flaxman's beautiful statue of Robert Burns.

The Society of Arts, which was incorporated in 1822, and has since obtained the royal charter, is very efficient in the encouragement of useful inventions, models of which are exhibited at its meetings. These are held once a fortnight in their hall, below the Assembly Rooms, George street.

Edinburgh has other societies, too numerous to be properly noticed in our limited space, such as the Watt Institution and the School of Arts, the Wernerian, the Diagnostic, the Dialectic, the Horticultural, the Hunterian, the Forensic, the Juridical, the Scots Law, the Speculative, the Phrenological, the Harveian, the Medico-Chirurgical, the Geological, the Obstetrical, the Theological, the Literary, and the Metaphysical.

Edinburgh is famed for the number and excellence of its educational institutions. Besides other charitably endowed schools, the Heriot Foundation Schools, maintained by the funds of Heriot's Hospital, but scattered over the city, afford an excellent education free of all expense. The Industrial or Ragged Schools, of which the first was instituted in 1855, and which provide food as well as education, are a great boon to the children of the most wretched classes, and have saved very many from growing up in ignorance and vice, fitting them for respectable and useful places in society. Numerous Sunday Schools are in beneficial operation. Many private academies and schools of a superior grade are conducted upon the best plans of instruction, and will all be found noticed in their proper place in the Directory. The Normal Schools of the Established Church and Free Church are extremely efficient and useful. They have contributed much to raise the average standard of attainments among teachers in Scotland.

The Royal Observatory and Astronomical Institution.—After several ineffectual attempts to erect an observatory, the foundation stone was laid on the Calton Hill in 1776; and the money subscribed being insufficient, the work was completed in 1792 at the expense of the city. The Astronomical Institution was established in 1812 and the town council granted to the association the ground and building on the Calton Hill, formerly destined for the purposes of an observatory, on the condition of their not being applied to any other purposes. The property was originally held in transferable shares, of twenty-five guineas each, but now entirely belongs to the government. The Observatory is under the charge of the Professor of Astronomy in the University, who receives a salary from government, and is Astronomer Royal for Scotland. A salary is also paid to an assistant. A regular series of observations is published yearly. The new observatory, erected by the Astronomical Institution, from a design by Playfair, a little to the east of the former, was founded in 1818; it is a cross, each branch of which is 62 feet long, with four projecting pediments of 38 feet each, supported by six columns of the Doric order, fronting the four cardinal points of the compass. In the centre is a dome, thirteen feet in diameter, under which is a pillar of solid masonry, of a conical form, six feet in diameter at the base, and nineteen feet high, intended for the astronomical circle. Connected with the Observatory is a time-ball, which, being conspicuously elevated on a tall pole on the summit of the Calton Hill, falls, in consequence of the action of electricity, exactly at one o'clock P.M. Greenwich time. A wire from the Observatory conveys the electric spark to the Castle, and at the same moment discharges a gun in one of the batteries daily, except on Sundays. The time-ball was in use for a number of years before the time-gun, which has now also been in use for several years. Both are highly prized in Edinburgh and in Leith.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

George Heriot's Hospital.—This richly endowed institution owes its origin to George Heriot, jeweller to King James VI. whom it may be remembered that Sir Walter Scott introduces in "The Fortunes of Nigel," and represents as on terms of no little familiarity with the King. He was born at Edinburgh, about the year 1563, and followed his father's trade of a goldsmith, dwelling and working with his own hands in a close, which was demolished in 1809, when the house was still found to contain the forge and bellows which he had used. When James ascended the English throne, Heriot, now his jeweller, went to London, where he died in 1624, having by his trade and by money-lending accumulated about £59,000, part of which he bequeathed to his two illegitimate daughters, and to other friends; the residue, £23,625, he devoted to the erection of an hospital for the maintenance and education of poor fatherless boys the sons of freemen of Edinburgh. The management of the charity was by his will entrusted to the members of the town council and parish ministers of Edinburgh. The foundation stone of the present building was laid in 1628; it was nearly completed in 1650, when Cromwell took possession of it for the accommodation of his sick soldiers. It was opened in 1659, for the admission of thirty boys. There are now 180 boys resident in the house. Boys are not admitted under the age of seven, nor above the age of ten, and they leave the hospital at fourteen; they receive an excellent education, and, on leaving the hospital, a sum of £50 in annual instalments during their apprenticeship, besides a present of clothes and books, and a further present of £5 at the close of their apprenticeship for good behaviour. Those who display talent, and a desire for any of the learned professions, are encouraged to enter the University of Edinburgh, and receive £30 a year for four years. There are also ten bursaries of £20 a year for youths attending the university who have not been educated in the hospital. The funds of the hospital having been invested in land near Edinburgh—the value of which has greatly increased, and on which, indeed, a large part of the present city is built—an annual surplus remained, which has been employed under an Act of Parliament, obtained in 1857, in erecting and maintaining free schools, the Heriot Foundation Schools, for the gratuitous education of poor children—those of deceased freemen of the city and of poor freemen being preferred. There are now twelve of these schools, besides four infant schools, and about 3,000 children receive an excellent education in them. The revenue of George Heriot's Hospital is about £23,000, and seems likely still to increase very much. The hospital itself is one of the most beautiful buildings in Edinburgh. The architects are said to have been two Scotchmen, William Wallace and William Aytoun. It is in the peculiar Renaissance style, which prevailed in Scotland in the seventeenth century. It forms a square, whose sides measure externally 162 feet, with square towers at the angles. It has 200 windows, each of which has a different ornamental device. The main entrance is surmounted by a tower. The interior quadrangle is 94 feet square.

George Watson's College Schools, Lauriston.—George Watson, who was accountant to the Bank of Scotland, died in April, 1723, and by his will bequeathed £12,000 to endow an hospital for the maintenance and instruction of the male children and grandchildren of decayed merchants in Edinburgh; and by the statutes of his trustees a preference was given to the sons and grandsons of members of the Edinburgh Merchant Company. An hospital for the board and education of the foundationers was founded in the year 1738, and opened in June, 1741, and it continued to be used for this purpose until 1870, when the governors of the four hospitals connected with the Merchant Company, taking advantage of the powers given by the Endowed Institutions (Scotland) Act, applied for and obtained provisional orders empowering them to convert the hospital into day-schools, and they were opened as such in September, 1870. This building was, however, sold to the corporation of the Royal Infirmary in 1871, and the building formerly called the Merchant Maiden Hospital was acquired for and is now being occupied as George Watson's College Schools for boys. There are about 1,100 pupils. The design of the schools is to provide boys with a liberal education qualifying them for commercial or professional life and for the universities, etc. The governors have also, in virtue of powers given them in the provisional order, established a school for girls, called George Watson's College Schools for Young Ladies. The course of study is the same as that of the Edinburgh Educational Institution for Young Ladies, and the girls attending the school may obtain, by competition, the same benefits as those attending that institution.

John Watson's Institution or Hospital is situated on the lands of Dean, about one mile from the north-west part of the city. This structure is in the Italian style, with a portico and a range of columns, from a design by Mr. Burn; its object is the "maintenance and education of destitute children, and bringing them to be useful members of society, and also for assistance in their outset in life." Mr. Watson was a writer to the signet, and bequeathed the whole of his property, in 1759, for this benevolent purpose. Between sixty and seventy boys and forty girls are maintained and educated in this institution until they have reached the age of fourteen. The building was erected in 1825-28. Mr. Watson left his money to trustees, to be employed in pious and charitable purposes at their discretion; and in 1764 they resolved on devoting it to a Foundling Hospital, but it was destined to its present use by an Act of Parliament in 1822. The funds meanwhile had greatly increased.

Gillespie's Hospital stands in a beautiful situation in the south-west suburb of the city. It owes its erection to the beneficence of Mr. James Gillespie, of Spylaw, a tobacco and snuff manufacturer in Edinburgh, who, in 1796, bequeathed a considerable property for the purpose of founding and endowing an hospital for old men and women, and a free school for the instruction of one hundred and twenty five poor boys. The edifice, which was designed by Mr. Burn, was founded in 1801, and opened in 1802. The free school was founded in 1801, and opened in 1803. Up to 1870, the hospital continued to be occupied by the old persons, of whom about forty were maintained in it. In that year the governors obtained a provisional order empowering them to convert the hospital into day schools, and it was opened as such in September, 1870. About 1,200 boys and girls are now being educated in the schools.

Trinity Hospital, the oldest charitable institution in the city, was founded by Mary of Gueldres, in the year 1461, for the reception of thirteen poor persons. The building was demolished in 1846, along with Trinity College Church, to make way for the North British Railway, and the funds are now distributed in outdoor relief.

The Orphan Hospital was projected by Andrew Gardner, merchant, in Edinburgh, and a house was hired in 1733. A building was erected in 1735. The present handsome edifice was completed in 1833, at an expense of about £16,000. It is situated a little to the west of Dean bridge, and maintains and educates about one hundred children (orphans), received between the ages of seven and ten, from any part of the country; they are taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography.

THE EDINBURGH MERCHANT COMPANY SCHOOLS.—The Edinburgh Educational Institution (for Young Ladies), West End of Queen Street.—This Institution was founded in 1695 by the Company of Merchants, and Mary Erskine, widow of James Hair, druggist, in Edinburgh, as an hospital for girls, and was known as the Merchant Maiden Hospital. The governors were incorporated by an Act of Parliament in 1707. The original edifice was in Bristol street; but having become insufficient for its object, the foundation stone of a new building was laid in Lauriston in 1816; and the erection, which was designed by Mr. Burn, was completed in 1818, at a cost of £12,250. Up to 1870, this building continued to be used as an hospital for the board and education of the foundationers, but in that year it was converted, under a provisional order, into a day school, and opened as such in September, 1870. It having been sold to the governors of George Watson's Hospital, the governors of this institution purchased extensive buildings in Queen street for the purposes of the institution, and they were opened in October, 1871. Upwards of 1,200 young ladies are now attending the institution, which provides a high-class education. The governors had the right of presenting thirty-four foundationers to the hospital, but the provisional order directs that this number be reduced to twenty, and that at least one-fourth of these—as well as of presentations belonging to private parties—shall be elected by competitive examination from girls attending this and the other Merchant Company Schools. Girls attending the institution may obtain, by competition, benefits estimated as worth £700. The Trades' Maiden Hospital was founded in 1704, by the corporations, for the maintenance and education of the daughters of decayed tradesmen belonging to the incorporated trades, or freemen of the city. To this hospital also Mrs. Mary Erskine was a liberal contributor. About fifty girls are maintained and educated here. They receive a good education, including French and German, as well as sewing and laundry work On leaving, each receives £5 11s. and a bible. The building stands near the Meadows.

Cauvin's Hospital is situated in Duddingston. The edifice, which resembles a large elegant villa, was opened in 1883. It was founded by Louis Cauvin, teacher of French, in Edinburgh, in 1825, for the education and maintenance of the sons of poor teachers and farmers. Boys are admitted between the age of six and eight, and retained until fourteen. There are at present upwards of twenty on the foundation.

Donaldson's Hospital, about half a mile from the city, on the Glasgow road, owes its origin to James Donaldson, printer, and long proprietor of the Edinburgh Advertiser newspaper, who died in 1830. He bequeathed about £20,000 for the erection and endowment of an hospital for the maintenance and education of poor boys and girls. The building was erected in 1842-50, from a design by Mr. Playfair. This princely edifice is a square, in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and is constructed to accommodate three hundred children of both sexes; provision has, however, been made for such addition to the building as will enable it to contain one hundred more. The age of admission is from six to nine, and they are discharged at fourteen. There are at present about 230 children in it, of whom many are deaf and dumb. Children of the name of Donaldson and Marshall have a preference. A beautiful little chapel is attached to the edifice, which is well worthy of a visit.

Stewart's Hospital, another palatial pile, was founded by Daniel Stewart, who died in 1814. He bequeathed about £18,000, besides some house property in the old town of Edinburgh; this accumulated to above £90,000. The building is situated in the Queensferry road, and cost about £30,000. Poor boys of the names of Stewart and Macfarlane have a preference of admission. It was designed for the support and education for seven years of poor boys generally, but has recently undergone some modification, the hospital system having been partially abolished, and the institution thrown open as a day school. For very moderate fees, pupils obtain a first-class education, and may compete for benefits worth £700.

The Fettes College is a large and handsome building, erected at Comely Bank, on the north side of the city, from plans by David Bryce, Esq., R.S.A., architect, and was opened in October, 1870. Sir William Fettes, Bart., of Comely Bank, who died in 1836, left property, which accumulated to upwards of £200,000, for the education, maintenance, and outfit of orphan boys, or of those whose parents are poor; the number is not to exceed fifty, but such a number of boys as the trustees may from time to time determine will be received as day scholars or boarders, from whom such fees will be exacted as shall be fixed by the trustees. For the accommodation of non-foundationers, a boarding house capable of receiving thirty boys was opened at the same time as the college, under the charge of the assistant masters. Provision is made for a liberal education, also for money prizes to be expended in outfit, and for exhibitions and scholarships in the University of Edinburgh.

The Edinburgh Academy, Henderson row.—The Edinburgh Academy, which was established in 1824, and incorporated by a royal charter from George IV., is under the superintendence of a board of fifteen directors, three of whom are elected annually from the body of subscribers. This academy is situated to the north-east of the Royal Circus. It is a handsome building, after a design by Mr. Burn, and cost upwards of £14,000.

Asylum for the Industrious Blind.—The idea of this institution was first communicated by Dr. Blacklock to Mr. Miller, who were both blind from their infancy, but it was chiefly through the active and benevolent exertions of Dr. David Johnstone, minister of North Leith, aided by a subscription of £20 at the commencement from the celebrated Wilberforce, that the institution was founded in 1793. In 1806 property was bought in Nicolson street for £1,575, and in 1822 other property in the same street for £2,200. The lower part of these buildings is advantageously laid out in shops, while the upper part is retained for the accommodation of the objects of the institution. Both establishments are fitted up with every comfort and accommodation for the inmates, who now number 148 in all—34 females and 114 males. The females are employed in sewing the covers for mattresses and feather beds, knitting stockings, &c. The males are chiefly employed in making mattresses, brushes, baskets, mats, &c., and in the weaving of sacking, matting, and "rag carpets," no less than 18 looms being employed in this work. The sales of the above kinds of work for 1870 amounted to upwards of £10,000. The building has recently undergone extensive alterations, at a cost of about £3,500, an elegant new facade, surmounted by stone faced dormer windows, and a handsome cornice and balustrade, having been added, with a large centre doorway, and on either side two spacious windows, separated by stone pillars. In a niche above the doorway is the late Handyside Ritchie's bust of Dr. Johnstone, the founder. The governing body consists of the Marquis of Tweeddale, four vice-presidents, and twelve directors chosen at the annual meeting of subscribers of half a guinea and upwards. There is also a Blind Asylum for children in Gayfield square.

The Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, established in 1810, is a large plain structure, situated in Henderson row. The expense of the building, furnishing, &c., was upwards of £7,000. Her Majesty is the patroness, and the Duke of Buccleuch the president.

The Magdalen Asylum was originally instituted in 1797. The building, plain and commodious, is situated in Canongate, and will accommodate from fifty to sixty penitents. This charity is supported by contributions, bequests, and the profits arising from the work of the inmates.

There is also an institution known as the Girls' House of Refuge, or Western Reformatory, at Dalry, in the western suburbs; and another, called the Edinburgh Industrial Home for Fallen Women, at Alnwick Hill, near Liberton.

The Ministers' Widows' Fund.—This meritorious scheme, originated in 1743, received the sanction of Parliament in 1744, and was established on its present footing by Acts passed in 1778 and 1814. By the latter Act is was provided that an addition of 20 per cent. on the former rates should be imposed; that every person in future admitted to the benefice for the first time, or to an office in a university, should pay a contribution of £10. A grant was made of the bishops' stipends in Scotland, and the stipends of the vacant churches. The four annual rates, to one of which every minister and professor is subject, are £3 3s., £4 14s. 6d., £6 6s., and £7 17s. 6d. The widow is entitled to an annuity, corresponding to the rate her husband had chosen; and the children, if he leaves no widow, to provisions of £100, £150, £200, or £250, according to the rate the father may have paid. Similar schemes have been formed by the society of writers to the signet, by the parochial schoolmasters of Scotland, and by the dissenting clergymen; but this scheme is particularly interesting as having been the first of its kind.

Horn's Charity distributes the interest of £3,500 to day labourers out of employment at Christmas, &c.

Dr. Robert Johnston's Bequest of £3,000 is equally appropriated in finding employment for the poor, in clothing the boys in Heriot's Hospital, and in support of poor exhibitioners at the University.

The income of Mr. Strathan's Estate is bestowed in small annual sums on poor old people not under 65 years of age, and on orphans not above twelve.

The Charity Workhouse, which is situated in the southern district, was erected by voluntary contributions in 1743. The principal funds for the support of this institution are a tax on the valued rents of the city, collections at the church doors, charitable donations, and contributions. The average number of its inmates is upwards of 700. There is also another workhouse in the parish of St. Cuthbert, which was opened in 1762, and is conducted nearly on the same plan as the former.

The House of Refuge, in Canongate, is for the reception of all persons in a state of destitution.

The New Royal Infirmary, Lauriston place, the foundation stone of which was laid in 1870, was opened by Lord Provost Boyd, in October, 1879, and is considered to be the finest building of the kind in the world; the cost of its erection was £350,000.

The Royal Public Dispensary, in Richmond street, was founded in 1776, by the late Dr. Andrew Duncan, and is liberally conducted, but still too limited in its scale for a population so large as that of Edinburgh; consequently several others have arisen in different localities; including those exclusively for the eye and the ear.

The New Town Dispensary, in Thistle street, was instituted in 1815, and is supported by subscriptions.

Chalmers' Hospital, in Lauriston place, was opened in 1864. It was erected, and is maintained, by funds bequeathed by George Chalmers, plumber, in Edinburgh, "for the sick and hurt." The management of the charity is in the Dean and Faculty of Advocates. There are many other charities for the relief of the afflicted poor, which will be found noticed, with their locality, in the list of public charities and institutions, as well as those for religious objects.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT, EXHIBITIONS, MARKETS, &c.

The Theatre Royal, occupying the site of the old Adelphi Theatre which was burned down in 1853, stands at the head of Broughton street and Leith walk. There is also the Gaiety Music Hall, situate in Chambers street. The Assembly Rooms are in George street, and were erected in 1787; they form part of a plain building, ornamented by a portico and pillars. The Hopetown Rooms, in Queen street, are also appropriated to balls and concerts. Exclusive of the balls here, many others, as well as concerts, take place during the season, under distinguished patronage. The national game of golf has several clubs to promote its practice. There are curling and skating clubs also, and a royal company of archers; the latter had the honour of being the king's body-guard during the visit of George IV., and more recently to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, on her return visit from Balmoral in 1859, and were again present when Her Majesty unveiled the statue erected in memory of Prince Consort, in 1876.

MARKETS.—Beneath and west of the North bridge are the chief markets for the town, which are plentifully supplied with flesh, fish, poultry, game, and vegetables; one called the Veal Market, is for veal, poultry, and game; the next three, mostly covered, are for beef and mutton; the lowest, which is a small area, surrounded by a piazza, is for fish. The Waverley Market, in Princes street, is the only market in the city for the sale of fruit and vegetables, and was constructed at the expense of the North British Railway Company, and given to the city in exchange for another site, which was required for railway purposes. Saturday is the chief market day,

There are also markets at Stockbridge, and in Broughton street, for the convenience of those vicinities, and likewise a corn market and one for cattle—the former in, and the latter contiguous to the Grassmarket. The New Corn Exchange, in the Grassmarket, was erected in 1849, from a design by Mr. Cousin. It has a façade in the Italian style, but chiefly consists of a structure of iron and glass, 150 feet long and 98 feet broad.

CEMETERIES.—Besides the old burying grounds within the city, which, having become very much crowded, were prejudicial to public health, and the use of some of which is being gradually discontinued, there are new cemeteries of considerable extent in the outskirts of the city. On the south is the cemetery of the Grange, on the west that of Dalry, on the north-west that of Dean, on the north that of Warriston, and on the north-east that of Rosebank. They are used chiefly by the more opulent classes, or at least by those in comparatively good circumstances. Many of the most celebrated persons who have died in Edinburgh for the last thirty years are interred in these cemeteries. They are all tastefully laid out with walks, shrubs, and flowers.

POPULATION.

The parliamentary burgh of Edinburgh, which consists of the entire parishes of Greenside, High, Lady Yester, New Greyfriars, New North, Old, Old Greyfriars, St. Andrew, St. George, St. John, St. Mary, St. Stephen, Tolbooth, Trinity College, and Tron, and parts of Canongate, Duddingston, Liberton, North Leith, St. Cuthbert, and of South Leith, contained in 1871 a population of 196,970, and in 1881, 228,190; showing an increase in the ten years of 31,220

The royal burgh comprises the following parishes, viz.: Greenside, High, Lady Yester, New Greyfriars, New North, Old Greyfriars, St. Andrew, St. George, St. John, St. Mary, St. Stephen, Tolbooth, Trinity College, and Tron.

A FEW PLACES OF ATTRACTION IN THE ENVIRONS OF THE CITY.

Arthur's Seat, on the east of the city, rises to the height of 822 feet above the sea, with a conical summit, abrupt to the west, where is a range of precipice facing the city, called the Salisbury Crags. From its summit twelve counties are visible. To the north are the ruins of St. Anthony's Chapel and Hermitage, and near the foot is St. Anthony's Well; west of Salisbury Crags is the lower hill of Saint Leonard, where existed in former days a religious establishment and a cemetery. The whole of this region is romantically grand, and derives additional interest from its being the locality of many interesting scenes in "The Heart of Mid-Lothian." The Queen's Drive, a carriage way made in 1844-47, winds round Arthur's Seat, and ascends to such a height as to afford a magnificent view. Arthur's Seat is included in the Queen's Park, and Holyrood Palace is very near the base of Salisbury Crags. At the opposite or south-western extremity of the park, is the village of Duddingston, with its loch, much frequented by anglers in summer, and a very gay scene in winter during frosts, when skaters and others resort to it to enjoy themselves on the ice. Bruntsfield Links are extensive open grounds situated on the road to Morningside, and are well adapted for the recreation of the citizens and for bleaching grounds; here the national game of golf is often played. A Roman Catholic nunnery, the convent of St. Margaret, was erected here in 1834. To the east of this common are the Meadows, the property of the city, extending almost to Newington. This tract of level ground, adorned with many trees, is about three-quarters of a mile in length, and a little less than a quarter of a mile in breadth, and it resembles rather one of the rich verdant fields of the Netherlands than a park in the northern kingdom. The walks are kept in a state of praiseworthy neatness, and no carriages or horses are permitted except in a road which crosses the Meadows through an avenue of trees, and in the Melville Drive, which passes along the whole length of the southern side.

Saint Bernard's Well is a medicinal spring near Stockbridge, on the Water of Leith. The water is sulphurous. Lord Gardenstone purchased the property, and erected over the well a small Doric temple, with a circle of columns supporting a dome, and having in the centre a figure of Hygeia, the goddess of health. At one time this spring was much visited in the morning by citizens who had complaints, real or imaginery, which the fancied virtues of Saint Bernard's waters would remove; but now Stockbridge and its spring are surrounded by streets, and its rural attractions having disappeared, the medicinal ones of the well have become all but neglected.

RESTALRIG, or Restalric, is about a mile east of the Old Town, between the sea shore and Holyrood House. It was formerly an independent parish, with a collegiate church, the fragments of which are still remaining. The burial ground was formerly much used by the Episcopalians. Close to Restalrig are the spacious Piershill Barracks for cavalry, enclosing a large parade ground. Population in 1871, 329.

LEITH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES MENTIONED WITH EDINBURGH.

LEITH, the seaport of Edinburgh, a parliamentary burgh, and a coast guard station, is situated on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, at the mouth of the Water of Leith, a stream which rises in the Pentland Hills, and flows through the north of Edinburgh. It is distant from the Royal Exchange of Edinburgh rather more than one mile and a half. The road between Edinburgh and Leith is called Leith walk, and is a noble street, busy with incessant traffic. The original name of this town was Inverleith, which signifies the mouth of the Leith; and though it is indebted to its proximity to Edinburgh for its commercial prosperity, it has often suffered greatly from being involved in the fate of that city, and also from the jealousy of its inhabitants. In 1485, the magistrates of Edinburgh ordained that no merchant of the city should take an inhabitant of Leith into partnership, and that none of the revenues of Edinburgh should be farmed by an inhabitant of Leith. The first great disaster which befel this rising town was its seizure and burning by the Earl of Hertford, 1544. Three years afterwards Leith was again visited and injured by the same general, and in the year 1549, it became involved in almost every transaction of importance during the regency of Mary of Lorraine, in her efforts to oppose the Reformation and sustained the horrors of a protracted seige, a garrison of French troops holding it in the interest of the Regent, while it was assailed by the Reformers and their English auxiliaries. Mary Queen of Scots mortgaged the superiority of Leith to Edinburgh, redeemable for one thousand merks, with reversion in favour of Bothwell, upon which the citizens of Edinburgh marched to Leith, and by taking possession of it, destroyed its independence. In 1643, the Solemn League and Covenant was signed at Leith, and the inhabitants have ever evinced the sincerity of their attachment to it. In 1650, Lambert, the parliamentary general, took possession of the town, and when Monk became commander-in-chief, he resided for some time in it, and by order of Cromwell the citadel was repaired and greatly strengthened. During General, Monk's residence he induced a number of English to reside here, who infused a spirit of mercantile adventure into the inhabitants. In 1715, Leith fort, which was called the citadel, was seized by the Jacobites, who, after holding it a short time, and plundering the the Custom House, hurriedly evacuated it during the night. This fortress is situated about half a mile to the west of the Custom House. Towards the close of last century the celebrated Paul Jones threatened it, buta sudden storm coming on, the buccaneer was obliged to make a precipitate retreat. The subsequent history being involved with that of Edinburgh, our readers are referred to our history of that city for the details. In 1838, Leith was separated from Edinburgh, to which it had been sold in 1567, and the common goods, customs, rates, &c., were vested in the provost and magistrates of the town, with the exception of the revenues arising from the harbour and dock dues. The council of Leith have the power of admiralty over Leith and the sea to a certain extent, and appoint an admiral for the execution of this duty, who performs it chiefly by the agency of the resident bailies, who are admirals depute, with a procurator fiscal, and other officers. Leith is irregularly built, and most of the older streets are crooked and narrow. There are ten wards of police, each of which formerly had two commissioners, chosen by the inhabitants; but the commission is now vested in the town council, who are the ex officio commisioners of police, and have the charge of watching, lighting and cleansing the town. The town is divided by the river, which is crossed by a stone bridge and three draw bridges, into two parts, called North Leith and South Leith. The Water of Leith has long been very filthy, from public works throwing their refuse into it, and from its receiving the sewage of part of Edinburgh and of Leith itself. The effect has been prejudicial to the health of the town. A great scheme of drainage under an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1864, for the conveyance of the sewage by pipes into the sea to the eastward of the east pier. The opening of the main pipe is far out from the shore, at the Black rocks. Leith was created a parliamentary burgh in 1832, and in conjunction with Musselburgh and Portobello sends one representative to the Imperial Parliament; the first member returned under the Reform Act was J. A. Murray, Esq., the then Lord Advocate; the present member is Andrew Grant, Esq. It is governed by a provost and two bailies and eleven councillors, and has a sheriff substitute court.

DOCKS, TRADE, PUBLIC BUILDINGS, &c.

The tidal harbour of Leith has been frequently improved; it now admits vessels of 2,000 tons burthen. In 1799 the magistrates obtained an act authorising them to borrow £160,000 to execute part of a range of docks, designed by John Rennie, Esq., civil engineer. The eastern wet dock was begun in 1810, and finished in 1817. The cost of the whole was £285,108, exclusive of £8,000 for building a bridge over the Water of Leith. The Victoria Dock lies immediately to the north of Rennie's eastern wet dock. It was built by the late James M. Rentel, Esq., C.E., and was opened about thirty years ago. It is 700 feet long by 300 feet broad, and therefore contains about five English acres. Its entrance is 60 feet wide and 24 deep at high water, or 6 feet deeper than that of the old docks, built by Rennie. Vessels drawing 22 feet are frequently admitted into the Victoria Dock. On the western side of the Victoria Dock, a twenty-ton steam crane was erected a few years ago, and is extensively used for shipping coals, &c. By an Act of Parliament, passed in 1826, the debt of the docks was reduced to £265,000, lent by Government to Edinburgh at the rate of three per cent., to be redeemed by a sinking fund formed by a deposit of one per cent. for twelve years, and two per cent afterwards till the debt is extinguished, after which the docks revert to the city of Edinburgh. Government also agreed to expend £19,000 for the extension of the western pier, and the city £2,800 on the eastern. In 1847 an act was obtained for the construction of additional docks, and the extension of the pier, Government granting £135,000 for the purpose. There are six graving docks—one of large dimensions, called the Prince of Wales Dock, opened 2nd February, 1863. The dock is 400 feet long, 80 wide, and 24 deep at spring tides; so that it is capable of receiving for repair a first-class ship of war, or two very heavy trading steamers. Instead of a pair of gates, the dock is opened and closed by floating or sinking an iron caisson. In the beginning of the year 1863, the Leith Dock Commissioners obtained from the Government Public Works Loan Commissioners a grant of £223,000 for the construction of new works. These works include a great reclamation embankment on the east sands; a wet dock nearly eleven acres in extent, with an entrance basin of about two acres, and a lock of 350 feet by 60 feet. The plans were prepared by Mr. Rendel and Mr. Robertson. The new dock is immediately east of the present graving dock, and connected with the harbour by a lock opening from the entrance basin. The embankment is about 3,500 feet long, enclosing 36 acres. The dock is 1,000 feet long and 450 feet wide. It has 28½ feet of water at high-water spring tides. The coping is 6½ feet above high water. The breadth of quay all round the dock is about 200 feet, affording room both for road and railway, with every facility for the entrance of vessels at any period of the tide. The Edinburgh Dock, which was commenced in 1874, and was opened by H. R. H. The Duke of Edinburgh, in July, 1881, consists of a centre basin 500 feet long and 650 feet wide, and two basins 1,000 feet long and 200 feet wide, separated by a jetty having a width of 250 feet. The total amount of masonry in the wet docks is 100,000 cubic yards. The north and south quays are each 1,500 feet long, and the two sides of the jetty 1,000 feet long each, having a total quayage in connection with the dock of 6,775 feet. The walls are 15 feet thick at the base, narrowing in two tiers to 8 feet. The new dock cost altogether about £300,000. Leith now possesses five docks and a total quayage of three miles 808 yards, 1,284 yards of which is the old portion. An extensive and commodious range of warehouses lines the whole length of the south side of the old docks, and the North British and Caledonian Railways are brought direct into the dockyard. There are two companies in the town engaged in the London and Leith trade, and others in trade between Leith and Hull, Liverpool, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness, Wick, Kirkwall, Lerwick, Stirling, Helmsdale, Hamburg, Rotterdam, &c. The greater part of the coasting vessels lie in the harbour, the others in the docks. The numerous steam vessels land and take aboard both at Leith and Granton. The length of the east pier is 3,580 feet; the pier is constructed partly of wood and partly of stone; and the west pier, constructed entirely of wood, is 3,123 feet in length, giving a depth of from 20 to 25 feet at high water. The principal commerce of Leith lies chiefly in its shipping, foreign and colonial trade, large quantities of grain and cattle being imported. The other imports are various and extensive, the exports consisting chiefly of coal, iron, spirits, ale, and manufactured goods. The manufactures of Leith are considerable; they comprise colour and paint works, artificial manure works and bone mills, roperies, and canvas, sail and soap making, sugar refining, brewing, distilling and tanning, fish curing and coopering, and the manufacture of glass bottles. Shipbuilding is a prominent pursuit in the employment of capital and labour, and many fine vessels have been launched from the yards. Saw mills are likewise in great activity here. There are very large flour mills; also very important works for preserving provisions, the manufacture of railway engines, &c. Both the manufactures and trade of Leith have of late years very rapidly increased. The town has also extended in various directions, and is rapidly growing in wealth and prosperity.

The customs revenue for the year 1874 amounted to £351,750, and in 1875, £388,267. There are seven banking establishments, as will be seen in the list under that head. The church of North Leith stands to the westward of the town, and was erected in 1814, in place of one built in 1496; it has a lofty spire, the first compartment being in the Doric order, the second Ionic, and the third Corinthian; the height to the summit of the cross is 158 feet; the portico is a model of an Ionic temple of the Ilissus, near Athens. It can accommodate a congregation of two thousand. The inhabitants have the right of nominating their minister, whose stipend is one of the best in Scotland. St. Thomas's Church, Shirra Brae, was founded and endowed by Sir John Gladstone, Bart., a native of Leith, in 1840. It has a handsome building, with turret and spire. St. John's Free Church, in Constitution street, formerly a chapel of ease, is a spacious and handsome building. The Mariner's Free Church, conveniently and appropriately situated near the docks, North Leith, is a building commodious for its purpose. Restalrig Church, rebuilt under the Church Extension Scheme, in 1837, is now in connection with St. Mary's, South Leith. There are places of worship for United Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Wesleyan Methodists, and other dissenting denominations. Among the public educational establishments are the Leith High School, erected in 1805; Dr. Bell's School, built in 1839; a boys' charity school, and one of industry for girls. These, among other useful institutions, will be found mentioned under their appropriate heads of Public Buildings or Schools. The Court House is a handsome structure, situated at the corner of Charlotte street. Leith is famous as being the birthplace of George Wishart, a martyr of the Reformation, who was cruelly condemned to the flames by order of Cardinal Beaton, at St. Andrews, in the 16th century; also that of Hugo Arnot, author of the history of Edinburgh. There are numerous charitable institutions, amongst which may be mentioned the Gladstone Asylum for Incurables; John Watts's Hospital, erected in 1863; the Lunatic Asylum, and Leith Hospital and Dispensary. There are also the High School, erected in 1806; Industrial Schools, a Philharmonic Society, and benefit associations, together with Bible and Missionary Societies, a Mechanics' Institute, having a library of over 7,000 volumes; and other libraries, baths, &c. The Town Hall, in Constitution street, was erected in 1827, at a cost of about £3,000. At the east end of Bernard street, in Constitution street, stand the Exchange Buildings, the largest public pile in Leith, which cost £16,000. They contain an assembly-room of large dimensions, public reading rooms, and the Post Office. The buildings are in the Grecian style of architecture, three storeys in height, and ornamented in front with five Ionic colums. The Custom House is in North Leith, at the end of the lower drawbridge; it was erected in 1812, and cost £12,617; it is in the Grecian style, with a pediment and columns; contiguous to which are extensive dock warehouses. The business of the excise office is likewise transacted within it. The Trinity House, on the west side of Kirkgate, was originally founded in 1555, and rebuilt in 1817, in the Grecian style of architecture, at an expense of £2,500. The Poorhouse, in Great Junction street, was erected in 1850, at a cost of £4,500, raised by assessment on the heritors of South Leith. Contiguous to St. Thomas's Church is the hospital erected by means of a bequest of £1,000, made by a Mr. Stewart, and the like sum raised among the inhabitants. Mr. Peter Hamilton, of Edinburgh, was the architect. Seafield Baths are situate at the eastern extremity of Leith Links; they were erected in 1813, at an expense of £8,000, raised in £50 shares. These baths are both elegant and commodious, and contain hot, cold, tepid and shower baths.

The market places of Leith are situated a short way east from the Tolbooth, and were erected so lately as the year 1819. The areas of the different markets are surrounded with neatly fitted-up stalls, and the whole has a commodious and creditable appearance. The parliamentary burgh of Leith comprises parts of the parishes of Cramond, North Leith, St. Cuthbert, and South Leith, and in 1871 contained a population of 44,280, and in 1881, 58,193, which exhibits an increase over 1871 of 13,913.

CRAMOND is a village and parish, the latter is partly in the county of Edinburgh, and the remainder in Linlithgowshire, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth. The western part of it is intersected with the river Almond, which falls into the sea at a creek, on the east side of which, on a declining bank, lies the village of Cramond, known to have been an important Roman station. On the opposite bank of the Almond, on a craggy eminence, a fortification existed; and from this the name is derived—Car-Almond (changed to Cramond), signifying "the Castle on the Almond." A little below the village, on the sands, stake nets are fixed for the fishery here. And opposite to the mouth of the Almond, at a short distance from the shore, is Cramond Island, a very pretty little island, rising with a gentle slope into a hill of moderate elevation. Part of it is cultivated. Within the parish are the village of CRAMOND BRIDGE and the port of GRANTON. Cramond bridge is situated on the Almond river, which is here crossed by a very fine stone bride, connected with the road from Edinburgh to South Queensferry, 5 miles from the city. There are considerable iron works established in this locality. The entire parish of Cramond contains an area of 5,177 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 3,061.

GRANTON, situated on the Frith of Forth, is about 2 miles north of Edinburgh, and the same distance west of Leith. This now important port, rapidly increasing in shipping requirements and conveniences, is the exclusive property of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1837 an Act of Parliament was obtained for the construction of a pier here—the port of Leith being ill adapted to the reception of vessels at low water. The pier, which extends 1,700 feet into the Forth, is of solid substantial masonry, built of stone obtained in the immediate neighbourhood. The depth within the pier at low water is from ten to twelve feet, and at high water about twenty-seven. There are extensive breakwaters, exceeding 1,000 yards in length, so that vessels can enjoy protection from the wind, from any point of the compass. One of Morton's patent slips is laid down, being one of the largest in the kingdom. Shipbuilding is pursued on a large scale. Warehouses have been licensed for the reception of bonded goods. There is a large hotel; and the North British Railway Company have a station; and hence passengers and goods are embarked for Burntisland whence the railway is continued to Aberdeen, &c. It was at this port (Granton) that Her Majesty Queen Victoria landed on her visit to Scotland, on the 1st of September, 1842. The Caledonian Railway Company has also a station at Granton, and a branch line, for goods only, running to the harbour. The population of Granton is returned with Cramond parish.
